Such certified order or judgment of conviction, when admitted into evidence, creates a rebuttable presumption that the unlawful drug activity giving rise to forfeiture under this section has occurred.

"(5) The provisions of paragraphs (3) and (4) of this subsection shall not be construed as limiting the admissibility of any evidence otherwise admissible, nor shall they limit the ability of the United States to establish probable cause that property is subject to forfeiture by any evidence otherwise admissible.

(3) by adding at the end the following:

"(2) If an individual intentionally engages in conduct during the course of a continuing criminal enterprise and thereby knowingly causes the death of any other individual, the individual so engaging shall be subject to the death penalty in accordance with this section.".

(b) PROCEDURE APPLICABLE WITH RESPECT TO THE DEATH PENALTY.—Section 408 of the Controlled Substances Act is amended by adding at the end the following:

"HEARING REQUIRED WITH RESPECT TO THE DEATH PENALTY

"(f) A person shall be subjected to the penalty of death for any offense under this section only if a hearing is held in accordance with this section.

"NOTICE BY THE GOVERNMENT IN DEATH PENALTY CASES

"(g)(1) Whenever the Government intends to seek the death penalty for an offense under this section for which one of the sentences provided is death, the attorney for the Government, a reasonable time before trial or acceptance by the court of a plea of guilty, shall sign and file with the court, and serve upon the defendant, a notice—

"(A) that the Government in the event of conviction will seek the sentence of death; and

"(B) setting forth the aggravating factors which the Government will seek to prove as the basis for the death penalty.

"(2) The court may permit the attorney for the Government to amend this notice for good cause shown.

"HEARING BEFORE COURT OR JURY

"(h)(1) When the attorney for the Government has filed a notice as required under subsection (f) and the defendant is found guilty of or pleads guilty to an offense under subsection (a)(2), the judge who presided at the trial or before whom the guilty plea was entered, or any other judge if the judge who presided at the trial or before whom the guilty plea was entered is unavailable, shall conduct a separate sentencing hearing to determine the punishment to be imposed. The hearing shall be conducted—

"(A) before the jury which determined the defendant's guilt;

"(B) before a jury impaneled for the purpose of the hearing if—

"(i) the defendant was convicted upon a plea of guilty;

"(ii) the defendant was convicted after a trial before the court sitting without a jury;

"(iii) the jury which determined the defendant's guilt has been discharged for good cause; or

"(iv) after initial imposition of a sentence under this section, redetermination of the sentence under this section is necessary; or

"(C) before the court alone, upon the motion of the defendant and with the approval of the Government.

"(2) A jury impaneled pursuant to paragraph (1)(B) shall consist of 12 members, unless, at any time before the conclusion of the hearing, the parties stipulate with the approval of the court that it shall consist of any number less than 12.

"PROOF OF AGGRAVATING AND MITIGATING FACTORS

"(i) Notwithstanding rule 32(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, when a defendant is found guilty of or pleads guilty to an offense under subsection (a)(2), no presentence report shall be prepared. In the sentencing hearing, information may be presented as to any matter relevant to the sentence and shall include matters relating to any of the aggravating or mitigating factors set forth in subsections (l) and (m), or any other mitigating factor. Where information is presented relating to any of the aggravating factors set forth in subsection (m), information may be presented relating to any other aggravating factor. Information presented may include the trial transcript and exhibits if the hearing is held before a jury or judge not present during the trial. Any other information relevant to such mitigating or aggravating factors may be presented by either the Government or the defendant, regardless of its admissibility under the rules governing admission of evidence at criminal trials, except that information may be excluded if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury. The Government and the defendant shall be permitted to rebut any information received at the hearing and shall be given fair opportunity to present argument as to the adequacy of the information to establish the existence of any of the aggravating or mitigating factors, and as to appropriateness in that case of imposing a sentence of death. The Government shall open the argument. The defendant shall be permitted to reply. The Government shall then be permitted to reply in rebuttal. The burden of establishing the existence of any aggravating factor is on the Government, and is not satisfied unless established beyond a reasonable doubt. The burden of establishing the existence of any mitigating factor is on the defendant, and is not satisfied unless established by a preponderance of the information.

"RETURN OF FINDINGS

"(j) The jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall consider all the information received during the hearing. It shall return special findings identifying any mitigating factors, and any aggravating factors set forth in subsection (m), found to exist. If one of the aggravating factors set forth in subsection (m)(1) and another of the aggravating factors set forth in subsection (m) is found to exist, a special finding identifying any other aggravating factor may be returned. A finding of any aggravating or mitigating factor by a jury shall be made by unanimous vote. If an aggravating factor set forth in subsection (m)(1) is not found to exist or an aggravating factor set forth in subsection (m)(1) is found to exist but no other aggravating factor set forth in subsection (m) is found to exist, the court shall impose a sentence, other than death, authorized by law. If an aggravating factor set forth in subparagraph (m)(1) and one or more of the other aggravating factors set forth in subsection (m) are found to exist, the jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall then consider whether the aggravating factors found to exist sufficiently outweigh any mitigating factor or factors found to exist, or in the absence of mitigating factors, whether the aggravating factors are themselves sufficient to justify a sentence of death. Based upon this consideration, the jury by unanimous vote, or if there is no jury, the court, shall return a finding as to whether a sentence of death is justified.

"IMPOSITION OF SENTENCE

"(k) Upon a finding that a sentence of death is justified, the court shall sentence the defendant to death. Otherwise the court shall impose a sentence, other than death, authorized by law.

"MITIGATING FACTORS

"(l) In determining whether a sentence of death is to be imposed on a defendant, the following mitigating factors shall be considered but are not exclusive:

"(1) The defendant was less than 18 years of age at the time of the crime.

"(2) The defendant's capacity to appreciate the wrongfulness of the defendant's conduct or to conform the defendant's conduct to the requirements of law was significantly impaired, but not so impaired as to constitute a defense to the charge.

"(3) The defendant was under unusual and substantial duress, although not such duress as constitutes a defense to the charge.

"(4) The defendant is punishable as a principal (as defined in section 2(a) of title 18 of the United States Code) in the offense, which was committed by another, but the defendant's participation was relatively minor, although not so minor as to constitute a defense to the charge.

"(5) The defendant could not reasonably have foreseen that the defendant's conduct in the course of the commission of the offense resulting in death for which the defendant was convicted, would cause, or would create a grave risk of causing, death to any person.

"AGGRAVATING FACTORS

"(m) If the defendant is found guilty of or pleads guilty to an offense under subsection (a)(2), the following aggravating factors shall be considered but are not exclusive:

"(1) The defendant—

"(A) intentionally killed the victim;

"(B) intentionally inflicted serious bodily injury which resulted in the death of the victim; or

"(C) intentionally engaged in conduct intending that the victim be killed or that lethal force be employed against the victim, which resulted in the death of the victim.

"(2) The defendant has been convicted of another Federal offense, or a State offense resulting in the death of a person, for which a sentence of life imprisonment or a sentence of death was authorized by statute.

"(3) The defendant has previously been convicted of two or more State or Federal offenses punishable by a term of imprisonment of more than one year, committed on different occasions, involving the infliction of, or attempted infliction of, serious bodily injury upon another person.

"(4) The defendant has previously been convicted of two or more State or Federal offenses punishable by a term of imprisonment of more than one year, committed on different occasions, involving the distribution of a controlled substance.

"(5) In the commission of the offense or in escaping apprehension for a violation of subsection (a)(1), the defendant knowingly created a grave risk of death to one or more persons in addition to the victim of the offense.

"(6) The violation of this chapter in relation to which the conduct described in subsection (a)(2) occurred was a violation of section 405.

"(7) The defendant committed the offense in an especially heinous, cruel, or depraved manner.

"(8) The defendant procured the commission of the offense by payment, or promise of payment, of anything of pecuniary value.

"(9) The defendant committed the offense as consideration for the receipt, or in the expectation of the receipt, of anything of pecuniary value.

"(10) The defendant committed the offense against a judge, a law-enforcement officer, or an employee of a penal or correctional institution, while that victim was performing official duties or because of that victim's status as a public servant of the United States, or a State or political subdivision of the United States. For purposes of this paragraph the term 'law-enforcement officer' means a public servant authorized by law to conduct or engage in the prevention, investigation, or prosecution of an offense.

"INSTRUCTION TO JURY ON RIGHT OF THE DEFENDANT TO JUSTICE WITHOUT DISCRIMINATION

"(n) In any hearing held before a jury under this section, the court shall instruct the jury that in its consideration of whether the sentence of death is justified it shall not consider the race, color, national origin, creed, or sex of the defendant. "(B) on or after March 1, 1987, and on March 1 of each succeeding year, the Secretary of the Treasury shall instruct the United States Executive Director of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the United States Executive Director of the International Development Association, the United States Executive Director of the Inter-American Development Bank, and the United States Executive Director of the Asian Development Bank to vote against any loan or other utilization of the funds of their respective institution to or for such country; and

SEC. 2012. CONDITIONS ON ASSISTANCE FOR BOLIVIA.

(a) OPERATION BLAST FURNACE.—(1) It is the sense of the Congress that—

(A) the Government of Bolivia's recent drug interdiction operations in cooperation with the United States (Operation Blast Furnace) evinced a determination to combat the growing power of the narcotics trade and narcotics traffickers;

(B) the operation has had a dramatic effect on the coca trade in that country by dropping the price of coca below the cost of production;

(C) as a result of this operation the coca trade has in the short term been sharply constricted;

(D) the restoration of non-coca dependent economic growth in Bolivia is crucial to the achievement of long-term progress in controlling illicit narcotics production; and

(E) control of illicit drug production is crucial to the survival of democratic institutions and democratic government in Bolivia.

(2) The Congress, therefore, applauds the demonstrated willingness of the Paz Estenssoro government, despite the risks of severe domestic criticism and disruptive economic consequences, to cooperate with the United States in Operation Blast Furnace.

(b) CONDITIONS ON ASSISTANCE.—Paragraph (2) of section 611 of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1985 is amended by striking out subparagraphs (A) and (B) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(B) the remaining amount of such assistance may be provided at any time after the President certifies to the Congress that Bolivia has either met in calendar year 1986 the eradication targets for the calendar year

1985 contained in its 1983 narcotics agreements with the United States or has entered into an agreement of cooperation with the United States for implementing that plan for 1987 and beyond (including numerical eradication targets) and is making substantial progress toward the plan's objectives, including substantial eradication of illicit coca crops and effective use of United States assistance.

(D) which, having been requested to do so by the United States Government, fails to provide reasonable cooperation to lawful activities of United States drug enforcement agents, including the refusal of permission to such agents engaged in interdiction of aerial smuggling into the United States to pursue suspected aerial smugglers a reasonable distance into the airspace of the requested country; and

(1) overriding vital national interests require that provision of such assistance;

(2) such assistance would improve the prospects for cooperation with such country in halting the flow of illegal drugs; and

(3) the government of such country had made bona fide efforts to investigate and prosecute appropriate charges for any crime described in subsection (a)(1)(C) which may have been committed in such country.

(c) RELATION TO OTHER PROVISIONS.—The restrictions contained in subsection (b) are in addition to the restrictions contained in section 481(h) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 or any other provision of law.

(d) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section, the terms "major illicit drug producing country", "major drug-transit country", and "United States assistance" have the same meaning as is given to those terms by section 481(i) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961.

SEC. 2015. INTERDICTION PROCEDURES FOR VESSELS OF FOREIGN REGISTRY.

(a) FINDING.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the interdiction by the United States Coast Guard of vessels suspected for carrying illicit narcotics can be a difficult procedure when the vessel is of foreign registry and is located beyond the customs waters of the United States;

(2) before boarding and inspecting such a vessel, the Coast Guard must obtain consent from either the master of the vessel or the country of registry; and

(3) this process, and obtaining the consent of the country of registry to further law enforcement action, may delay the interdiction of the vessel by 3 or 4 days.

(b) NEGOTIATIONS CONCERNING INTERDICTION PROCEDURES.—

(1) The Congress urges the Secretary of State, in consultation with the Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating, to increase effects to negotiate with relevant countries procedure which will facilitate interdiction of vessels suspected of carrying illicit narcotics.

(3) The Secretary of State shall submit reports to the Congress semiannually identifying those countries which have failed to negotiate with respect to interdiction procedures.

SEC. 2016. INTELLIGENCE SUPPORT TO COMBATING THE DRUG PROBLEM.

(a) It is the sense of the Congress that the Intelligence Community can play a key role in United States efforts to prevent the importation of illegal drugs into the United States. It is also the sense of the Congress that the drug problem is sufficiently important that monitoring the production of illegal drugs and providing support to efforts to halt the trafficking in illegal drugs should be a high priority for the United States intelligence program.

(b) In order to improve the strategic international narcotics control program of the United States and to assist the reporting requirements of section 481(e) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, the Congress directs the Director of Central Intelligence to improve the collection and analysis of foreign drug production sufficiently to produce highly reliable data on drug cultivation, harvest, and yields for each major illicit drug producing country (as defined by section 481(i) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961).

(c) The Congress also directs the Director of Central Intelligence (hereafter in this paragraph referred to as the "DCI") to make support to anti-drug efforts a Level One Priority in his National Foreign Intelligence Strategy and to reflect this priority in the National Foreign Intelligence Program. The Congress understands that—

(1) a copy of the DCI's National Foreign Intelligence Strategy will be provided to the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives and the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate, with the DCI's budget request for fiscal year 1988; and

(a) MDB ASSISTANCE FOR DEVELOPMENT AND IMPLEMENTATION OF DRUG ERADICATION PROGRAM.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall instruct the United States Executive Directors of the multilateral development banks to initiate discussions with other Directors of their respective banks and to propose that all possible assistance be provided to each major illicit drug producing country for the development and implementation of a drug eradication program, including technical assistance, assistance in conducting feasibility studies and economic analyses, and assistance for alternate economic activities.

(b) INCREASES IN MULTILATERAL DEVELOPMENT BANK LENDING FOR CROP SUBSTITUTION PROJECTS.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall instruct the United States Executive Directors of the multilateral development banks to initiate discussions with other Directors of their respective banks and to propose that each such bank increase the amount of lending by such bank for crop substitution programs which will provide an economic alternative for the cultivation of production of illicit narcotic drugs or other controlled substances in major illicit drug producing countries, to the extent such countries develop and maintain adequate drug eradication programs.

(c) NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL REPORT.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall include in the annual report to the Congress by the National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Policies a detailed accounting of the manner in which and the extent to which the provisions of this section have been carried out.

The Congress hereby declares that drugs are a national security problem and urges the President to explore the possibility of engaging such essentially security-oriented organizations as the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in cooperative drug programs.

SEC. 2021. FINDINGS CONCERNING GREATER INTERNATIONAL EFFORT TO ADDRESS DRUG THREAT.

The Congress finds that—

(1) in response to the growing narcotics threat to the international community—

(A) the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, the 1972 Protocol amending that Convention, and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances were adopted under United Nations asupices, and

(B) the United Nations has created various entities to deal with drug abuse control and prevention; and

(2) a greater international effort is required to address this threat, such as additional or increased contributions by other countries to the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse and Control and greater coordination of enforcement and eradication efforts.

SEC. 2022. INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON DRUG ABUSE AND ILLICIT TRAFFICKING.

(a) CONGRESSIONAL SUPPORT.—The Congress hereby declares its support for United Nations General Assembly Resolution 40/122 adopted on December 13, 1985, in which the General Assembly decided to convene in 1987, an International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking in order to generate universal action to combat the drug problem in all its forms at the national, regional, and international levels, and to adopt a comprehensive outline of future activities.

SEC. 2032. NARCOTICS CONTROL EFFORTS IN MEXICO.

(a) CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS.—The Congress finds—

(1) in their meeting in August 1986, President de la Madrid Hurtado and President Reagan recognized the unique relationship between our two countries and the importance and the desire to respect the sovereignty of each nation;

(2) further, the United States government has actively worked to support the Mexican government in easing its international debt burden;

(3) Both presidents pledged their cooperation in drug eradication, enforcement and education;

(4) This pledge of cooperation has not been realized fully because of the inadequate response of the Mexican government in:

(A) fully investigating the 1985 murders of U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration agent Enrique Camarena Salazar and his pilot, Alfedo Zavala Avelar;

(B) fully investigating the 1986 detention and torture of U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration agent Victor Cortez, Junior;

(C) bringing to trial and effectively prosecuting those responsible for the Camarena and Zavala murders and those responsible for the detention and torture of Cortez;

(D) using effectively and efficiently the fleet of aircraft provided by the United States government for drug eradication and interdiction; and

(E) preventing drug trafficking and drug-related violence on the U.S.-Mexican border.

(b) Therefore, it is the sense of Congress that unless substantial progress is demonstrated in the near future on the issues described in subparagraph (A)(4), the President should consider taking one or more of the following measures:

(1) imposition of a mandatory travel advisory for all of Mexico;

(2) restrictions on foreign assistance (including further disbursements from the Exchange Stabilization Fund and Federal Reserve Bank);

(3) denial of favorable tariff treatment for Mexican products;

(4) denial of favorable U.S. votes in multilateral development banks.

(3) funds to support the interdiction of narcotics smugglers who threaten the transport of drugs through the air, on the sea, and across the land borders of the United States should be emphasized in the Federal Government budget process to the same extent as the other elements of a comprehensive antidrug effort are emphasized;

(4) the Department of Defense and the use of its resources should be an integral part of a comprehensive, natonal drug interdiction program;

(5) the Federal Government civilian agencies engaged in drug interdiction, particularly the United States Customs Service and the Coast Guard, currently lack the aircraft, ships, radar, command, control, communications, and intelligence (C3I) system, and manpower resources necessary to mount a comprehensive attack on the narcotics traffickers who threaten the United States;

(6) the civilian drug interdiction agencies of the United States are currently interdicting only a small percentage of the illegal, drug smuggler penetrations in the United States every year;

(7) the budgets for our civilian drug interdiction agencies, primarily the United States Customs Service and the Coast Guard, have not kept pace with those of the traditional investigative law enforcement agencies of the Department of Justice; and

(8) since the amendment of the Posse Comitatus Act (18 U.S.C. 1385) in 1981, the Department of Defense has assisted in the effort to interdict drugs, but they can do more.

(1) to increase the level of funding and resources available to civilian drug interdiction agencies of the Federal Government;

(2) to increase the level of support from the Department of Defense as consistent with the Posse Comitatus Act, for interdiction of the narcotics traffickers before such traffickers penetrate the borders of the United States and

Subtitle B—Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986

SEC. 4101. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986".

SEC. 4102. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that:

(1) Drug abuse education and prevention programs are essential components of a comprehensive strategy to reduce the demand for and use of drugs throughout the Nation.

(2) Drug use and alcohol abuse are widespread among the Nation's students, not only in secondary schools, but increasingly in elementary schools as well.

(3) The use of drugs and the abuse of alcohol by students constitutes a grave threat to their physical and mental well-being and significantly impedes the learning process.

(4) The tragic consequences of drug use and alcohol abuse by students are felt not only by students and their families, but also by their communities and the Nation, which can ill afford to lose their skills, talents, and vitality.

(5) Schools and local organizations in communities throughout the Nation have special responsibilities to work together to combat the scourge of drug use and alcohol abuse.

(6) Prompt action by our Nation's schools, families, and communities can bring significantly closer the goal of a drug-free generation and a drug-free society.

SEC. 4103. PURPOSE.

The purpose of this subtitle is to assist States in their efforts to educate concerning, and to prevent, drug use and alcohol abuse through school and community based programs.

SEC. 4201. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Indian Alcohol and Substance Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act of 1986".

PART I—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 4202. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) the Federal Government has a historical relationship and unique legal and moral responsibility to Indian tribes and their members,

(2) included in this responsibility is the treaty, statutory, and historical obligation to assist the Indian tribes in meeting the health and social needs of their members,

(3) alcoholism and alcohol and substance abuse is the most severe health and social problem facing Indian tribes and people today and nothing is more costly to Indian people than the consequences of alcohol and substance abuse measured in physical, mental, social, and economic terms,

(4) alcohol and substance abuse is the leading generic risk factor among Indians, and Indians die from alcoholism at over 4 times the age-adjusted rates for the United States population and alcohol and substance misuse results in a rate of years of potential life lost nearly 5 times that of the United States,

(5) 4 of the top 10 causes of death among Indians are alcohol and drug related injuries (18 percent of all deaths), chronic liver disease and cirrhosis (5 percent), suicide (3 percent), and homicide (3 percent),

(6) primarily because deaths from unintentional injuries and violence occur disproportionately among young people, the age-specific death rate for Indians is approximately double the United States rate for the 15 to 45 age group,

(7) Indians between the ages of 15 and 24 years of age are more than 2 times as likely to commit suicide as the general population and approximately 80 percent of those suicides are alcohol-related,

(8) Indians between the ages of 15 and 24 years of age are twice as likely as the general population to die in automobile accidents, 75 percent of which are alcohol-related,

(9) the Indian Health Service, which is charged with treatment and rehabilitation efforts, has directed only 1 percent of its budget for alcohol and substance abuse problems,

(10) the Bureau of Indian Affairs, which has responsibility for programs in education, social services, law enforcement, and other areas, has assumed little responsibility for coordinating its various efforts to focus on the epidemic of alcohol and substance abuse among Indian people,

(11) this lack of emphasis and priority continues despite the fact that Bureau of Indian Affairs and Indian Health Service officials publicly acknowledge that alcohol and substance abuse among Indians is the most serious health and social problem facing the Indian people, and

(12) the Indian tribes have the primary responsibility for protecting and ensuring the well-being of their members and the resources made available under this subtitle will assist Indian tribes in meeting that responsibility.

SEC. 4203. PURPOSE.

It is the purpose of this subtitle to—

(1) authorize and develop a comprehensive, coordinated attack upon the illegal narcotics traffic in Indian country and the deleterious impact of alcohol and substance abuse upon Indian tribes and their members,

A governmental entity may require the disclosure by a provider of electronic communications services of the contents of an electronic communication that has been in electronic storage in an electronic communications system for more than one hundred and eighty days by the means available under subsection (b) of this section.

"(b) CONTENTS OF ELECTRONIC COMMUNICATIONS IN A REMOTE COMPUTING SERVICE.—(1) A governmental entity may require a provider of remote computing service to disclose the contents of any electronic communication to which this paragraph is made applicable by paragraph (2) of this subsection—

"(A) without required notice to the subscriber or customer, if the governmental entity obtains a warrant issued under the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure or equivalent State warrant; or

"(B) with prior notice from the governmental entity to the subscriber or customer if the governmental entity—

"(i) uses an administrative subpoena authorized by a Federal or State statute or a Federal or State grand jury subpoena; or except that delayed notice may be given pursuant to section 2705 of this title.

"(2) Paragraph (1) is applicable with respect to any electronic communication that is held or maintained on that service—

"(A) on behalf of, and received by means of electronic transmission from (or created by means of computer processing of communications received by means of electronic transmission from), a subscriber or customer of such remote computing service; and

"(B) solely for the purpose of providing storage or computer processing services to such subscriber or customer, if the provider is not authorized to access the contents of any such communications for purposes of providing any services other than storage or computer processing.

"(B) A provider of electronic communication service or remote computing service shall disclose a record or other information pertaining to a subscriber to or customer of such service (not including the contents of communications covered by subsection (a) or (b) of this section) to a governmental entity only when the governmental entity—

"(i) uses an administrative subpoena authorized by a Federal or State statute, or a Federal or State grand jury subpoena;

"(ii) obtains a warrant issued under the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure or equivalent State warrant;

"(2) A governmental entity receiving records or information under this subsection is not required to provide notice to a subscriber or customer.

"(d) REQUIREMENTS FOR COURT ORDER.—A court order for disclosure under subsection (b) or (c) of this section shall issue only if the governmental entity shows that there is reason to believe the contents of a wire or electronic communication, or the records or other information sought, are relevant to a legitimate law enforcement inquiry. In the case of a State governmental authority, such a court order shall not issue if prohibited by the law of such State. A court issuing an order pursuant to this section, on a motion made promptly by the service provider, may quash or modify such order, if the information or records requested are unusually voluminous in nature or compliance with such order otherwise would cause an undue burden on such provider.

"(e) NO CAUSE OF ACTION AGAINST A PROVIDER DISCLOSING INFORMATION UNDER THIS CHAPTER.—No cause of action shall lie in any court against any provider of wire or electronic communication service, its officers, employees, agents, or other specified persons for providing information, facilities, or assistance in accordance with the terms of a court order, warrant, subpoena, or certification under this chapter.

"§ 2704. Backup preservation

"(a) BACKUP PRESERVATION.—(1) A governmental entity acting under section 2703(b)(2) may include in its subpoena or court order a requirement that the service provider to whom the request is directed create a backup copy of the contents of the electronic communications sought in order to preserve those communications. Without notifying the subscriber or customer of such subpoena or court order, such service provider shall create such backup copy as soon as practicable consistent with its regular business practices and shall confirm to the governmental entity that such backup copy has been made. Such backup copy shall be created within two business days after receipt by the service provider of the subpoena or court order.

"(2) Notice to the subscriber or customer shall be made by the governmental entity within three days after receipt of such confirmation, unless such notice is delayed pursuant to section 2705(a).

"(3) The service provider shall not destroy such backup copy until the later of—

"(A) the delivery of the information; or

"(B) the resolution of any proceedings (including appeals of any proceeding) concerning the government's subpoena or court order.

"(4) The service provider shall release such backup copy to the requesting governmental entity no sooner than fourteen days after the governmental entity's notice to the subscriber or customer if such service provider—

"(A) has not received notice from the subscriber or customer that the subscriber or customer has challenged the governmental entity's request; and

"(B) has not initiated proceedings to challenge the request of the governmental entity.

"(5) A governmental entity may seek to require the creation of a backup copy under subsection (a)(1) of this section if in its sole discretion such entity determines that there is reason to believe that notification under section 2703 of this title of the existence of the subpoena or court order may result in destruction of or tampering with evidence. This determination is not subject to challenge by the subscriber or customer or service provider.

"(b) CUSTOMER CHALLENGES.—(1) Within fourteen days after notice by the governmental entity to the subscriber or customer under subsection (a)(2) of this section, such subscriber or customer may file a motion to quash such subpoena or vacate such court order, with copies served upon the governmental entity and with written notice of such challenge to the service provider. A motion to vacate a court order shall be filed in the court which issued such order. A motion to quash a subpoena shall be filed in the appropriate United States district court or State court. Such motion or application shall contain an affidavit or sworn statement—

"(A) stating that the applicant is a customer or subscriber to the service from which the contents of electronic communications maintained for him have been sought; and

"(B) stating the applicant's reasons for believing that the records sought are not relevant to a legitimate law enforcement inquiry or that there has not been substantial compliance with the provisions of this chapter in some other respect.

"(2) Service shall be made under this section upon a governmental entity by delivering or mailing by registered or certified mail a copy of the papers to the person, office, or department specified in the notice which the customer has received pursuant to this chapter. For the purposes of this section, the term 'delivery' has the meaning given that term in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

"(3) If the court finds that the customer has complied with paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection, the court shall order the governmental entity to file a sworn response, which may be filed in camera if the governmental entity includes in its response the reasons which make in camera review appropriate. If the court is unable to determine the motion or application on the basis of the parties' initial allegations and response, the court may conduct such additional proceedings as it deems appropriate. All such proceedings shall be completed and the motion or application decided as soon as practicable after the filing of the governmental entity's response.

"(4) If the court finds that the applicant is not the subscriber or customer for whom the communications sought by the governmental entity are maintained, or that there is a reason to believe that the law enforcement inquiry is legitimate and that the communications sought are relevant to that inquiry, it shall deny the motion or application and order such process enforced. If the court finds that the applicant is the subscriber or customer for whom the communications sought by the governmental entity are maintained, and that there is not a reason to believe that the communications sought are relevant to a legitimate law enforcement inquiry, or that there has not been substantial compliance with the provisions of this chapter, it shall order the process quashed.

"(5) A court order denying a motion or application under this section shall not be deemed a final order and no interlocutory appeal may be taken therefrom by the customer.

"§ 2705. Delayed notice

"(a) DELAY OF NOTIFICATION.—(1) A governmental entity acting under section 2703(b) of this title may—

"(A) where a court order is sought, include in the application a request, which the court shall grant, for an order delaying the notification required under section 2703(b) of this title for a period not to exceed ninety days, if the court determines that there is reason to believe that notification of the existence of the court order may have an adverse result described in paragraph (2) of this subsection; or

"(B) where an administrative subpoena authorized by a Federal or State statute or a Federal or State grand jury subpoena is obtained, delay the notification required under section 2703(b) of this title for a period not to exceed ninety days upon the execution of a written certification of a supervisory official that there is reason to believe that notification of the existence of the subpoena may have an adverse result described in paragraph (2) of this subsection.

"(2) An adverse result for the purposes of paragraph (1) of this subsection is—

"(A) endangering the life or physical safety of an individual;

"(B) flight from prosecution;

"(C) destruction of or tampering with evidence;

"(D) intimidation of potential witnesses; or

"(E) otherwise seriously jeopardizing an investigation or unduly delaying a trial.

"(3) The governmental entity shall maintain a true copy of certification under paragraph (1)(B).

"(4) Extensions of the delay of notification provided in section 2703 of up to ninety days each may be granted by the court upon application, or by certification by a governmental entity, but only in accordance with subsection (b) of this section.

"(5) Upon expiration of the period of delay of notification under paragraph (1) or (4) of this subsection, the governmental entity shall serve upon, or deliver by registered or first-class mail to, the customer or subscriber a copy of the process or request together with notice that—

"(A) states with reasonable specificity the nature of the law enforcement inquiry; and

"(B) informs such customer or subscriber—

"(i) that information maintained for such customer or subscriber by the service provider named in such process or request was supplied to or requested by that governmental authority and the date on which the supplying or request took place;

"(ii) that notification of such customer or subscriber was delayed;

"(iii) what governmental entity or court made the certification or determination pursuant to which that delay was made; and

"(iv) which provision of this chapter allowed such delay.

"(6) As used in this subsection, the term 'supervisory official' means the investigative agent in charge or assistant investigative agent in charge or an equivalent of an investigating agency's headquarters or regional office, or the chief prosecuting attorney or the first assistant prosecuting attorney or an equivalent of a prosecuting attorney's headquarters or regional office.

"(b) PRECLUSION OF NOTICE TO SUBJECT OF GOVERNMENTAL ACCESS.—A governmental entity acting under section 2703, when it is not required to notify the subscriber or customer under section 2703(b)(1), or to the extent that it may delay such notice pursuant to subsection (a) of this section, may apply to a court for an order commanding a provider of electronic communications service or remote computing service to whom a warrant, subpoena, or court order is directed, for such period as the court deems appropriate, not to notify any other person of the existence of the warrant, subpoena, or court order. The court shall enter such an order if it determines that there is reason to believe that notification of the existence of the warrant, subpoena, or court order will result in—

"(1) endangering the life or physical safety of an individual;

"(2) flight from prosecution;

"(3) destruction of or tampering with evidence;

"(4) intimidation of potential witnesses; or

"(5) otherwise seriously jeopardizing an investigation or unduly delaying a trial.

"§ 2706. Cost reimbursement

"(a) PAYMENT.—Except as otherwise provided in subsection (c), a governmental entity obtaining the contents of communications, records, or other information under section 2702, 2703, or 2704 of this title shall pay to the person or entity assembling or providing such information a fee for reimbursement for such costs as are reasonably necessary and which have been directly incurred in searching for, assembling, reproducing, or otherwise providing such information. Such reimbursable costs shall include any costs due to necessary disruption of normal operations of any electronic communication service or remote computing service in which such information may be stored.

"(b) AMOUNT.—The amount of the fee provided by subsection (a) shall be as mutually agreed by the governmental entity and the person or entity providing the information, or, in the absence of agreement, shall be as determined by the court which issued the order for production of such information (or the court before which a criminal prosecution relating to such information would be brought, if no court order was issued for production of the information).

"(c) The requirement of subsection (a) of this section does not apply with respect to records or other information maintained by a communications common carrier that relate to telephone toll records and telephone listings obtained under section 2703 of this title. The court may, however, order a payment as described in subsection (a) if the court determines the information required is unusually voluminous in nature or otherwise caused an undue burden on the provider.

"§ 2707. Civil action

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

AFTER SANCTIONS, WHAT NEXT

HON. BRUCE A. MORRISON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I want to share with all my colleagues an important article by Floyd Abrams and Diane Orentlicher of the Lawyers Committee for Human Rights, published in the New York Times on October 6, 1986, setting forth an agenda for effective implementation of our victory on the South Africa sanctions issue.

SANCTIONS AS A MEANS TO AN END

(By Floyd Abrams and Diane Orentlicher)

Congress has prevailed. The Senate and the House have both overriden President Reagan's veto, imposing stringent sanctions against South Africa, and the United States will soon register its abhorrence for apartheid in no uncertain terms. Having won the battle for sanctions, Congress now should consider how to make the most of their impact.

Such an effort will require continued congressional pressure on the Administration. It was, after all, damage wrought by Administration policy that made these new, strict sanctions necessary in the first place. Far from promoting positive change, the Administration's policy toward South Africa has consistently reinforced Pretoria's most sinister impulses.

In June, for example instead of condemning the new state of emergency in South Africa, President Reagan voiced strong opposition to serious American sanctions. The President has also adopted Prime Minister P.W. Botha's rhetoric of repression, describing South Africa's Government radio broadcasts.

These words are dangerous as well as wrong-headed, for they exonerate Mr. Botha for the most brutal excesses of apartheid. They also help to hide what is really happening on the ground in South Africa. In truth, it is estimated that some 800 South Africans, most of them black, were killed by security forces in the period between September 1984 and July 1986. A staggering 93 percent of the black detainees interviewed for a recent study by the University of Cape Town said they had been tortured.

Congress must not fail to use its leverage to elicit more effective diplomacy from the Administration. Congressional leaders should specify in some detail what kind of policies they would like to see the Administration pursue—and should make clear that progress toward these goals will influence what Congress does in the future.

To begin with, Congress should press this most rhetorically oriented Administration to condemn Pretoria's official violence in the strongest terms. Words matter in international diplomacy only when they are believed. Does the Administration lack words to condemn the many deaths in detention deliberately caused, and later shielded, by agents of the South African state? Can it offer—and credibly offer—special condemnation of the South African security forces' use of violence against children?

Children as young as four years old have been shot dead by those forces in the past year; babies have been tear-gassed to death in their own homes. Is it really too much to ask that the Reagan Administration express revulsion at such acts with the same passion that it uses when speaking of violations of human rights of Communist countries?

A second focus should be on South Africa's permanent security laws. These Draconian measures grant the Government sweeping powers of detention and permit the Minister of Law and Order to declare any township or neighborhood an "unrest area," giving him virtually free rein to govern those areas however he sees fit.

Third, the Administration must begin to protest Pretoria's efforts to crush those who seek to promote human rights in South Africa. Since the most recent state of emergency was declared, on June 12, at least nine human rights lawyers have been detained. Though those lawyers were subsequently released—thanks in part, to protests by the American Bar Association and other organizations—many other human rights activists remain in detention. The most recently detained include five white women affiliated with community-based organizations working in support of human rights.

Fourth, the Administration should bring itself to pressure Pretoria to lift its sweeping press restraints—restraints that now, during the state of emergency, include prohibitions on journalists' even bearing witness to acts of repression.

Fifth, the Administration must go beyond its well-rehearsed call for an end to apartheid—an appeal that goes no farther, after all, than what P.W. Botha himself has endorsed. The United States must of course continue to press for an end to the most flagrant abuses inflicted by the South African Government, but the Administration should also make known in the clearest of terms that it believes all South Africans are entitled to basic political rights. The time is long past due for the Administration to stand squarely beside those South Africans who demand representative democracy.

Thus far, the Administration has conspicuously failed to do so. Indeed, President Reagan has at times seemed almost aprehensive that blacks may some day wield political power in South Africa. How else can one explain the comment addressed to Mr. Botha in July; "We understand the apprehension and fear and concern of all your people"? The President's failure to call for majority rule has a grotesque significance given his much-vaunted policy of aggressively promoting democracy in places like Nicaragua and Angola.

There is, sadly, no dearth of evils in South Africa to which the Reagan Administration should turn its attention. Even as stronger sanctions are implemented, Congress must continue to press this Administration, for by itself it seems quite tone-deaf to the magnitude of the evil of apartheid.

IT'S ABOUT TIME!

HON. CARDISS COLLINS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, last Thursday was a great day for freedom, justice, and human rights. At last, Congress has acted decisively against the barbarism of apartheid in South Africa.

I want to take this opportunity to commend the Senate for overriding President Reagan's veto of H.R. 4868, the South African sanctions bill. I, and my colleagues in the House, recognized the need for sanctions long ago. It's good to see that the Senate has finally decided to join us.

It's truly gratifying to finally obtain strong sanctions against the racist regime in Pretoria. I only wish they could have come sooner. Many of us have been fighting for a realistic antiapartheid policy for years. We realized that support for that evil regime ran counter to all American ideals. We knew that President Reagan's policy was bankrupt. We did everything we could to publicize the inhumanity of apartheid. I even got arrested protesting outside the South African Embassy. Now, finally, we have accomplished something.

I am not naive. I realize that H.R. 4868 is only a start, a step in the right direction. Change will not come at once. The violence in South Africa will not stop tomorrow. There is still much work to do. But it feels good to be on the right road.

Apartheid's days are numbered. Freedom and justice are coming.

THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF MOUNT ZION MISSIONARY BAPTIST CHURCH

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Mount Zion Missionary Baptist Church in Snow Hill, MD, on the occasion of its 100th anniversary, October 12, 1986.

Mount Zion Missionary Baptist Church is a small church in size but, very large in heart. This church has been a leader in community services. It was the site of the first Head Start Center for the Worcester County Community Action Committee. Shore-up, Inc., a self-help organization dedicated to rural economics and urban problems, was founded by Mount Zion members and clergy. Many citizens of Worcester County would have gone without food, shelter, or clothing had it not been for the members this church.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

This congregation lives its religious teachings every day of the year. On behalf of the residents of the First Congressional District, I offer my congratulations, best wishes, and continued success as Mount Zion begins its second century.

H.R. 5565—THE DOMESTIC BANKING STABILITY AND HOUSING ACT

HON. GEORGE C. WORTLEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. WORTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 5565, the Domestic Banking Stability and Housing Act. There is a critical need for this legislation to be enacted, and I urge my colleagues to put aside differences on other banking-related issues and to unite in support of this bill.

The bill consists of four sections which would: Preserve the safety and soundness of our Nation's banks and savings and loans; benefit bank customers; and, extend important housing programs including the Federal Housing Administration's guarantees for mortgage loans.

First, I would like to comment on the safety and soundness issue. It is no secret that a record number of banks are expected to fail this year. But this is not to imply that our overall financial system is in jeopardy, for it is not. However, I am convinced that a serious crisis could develop unless we act to ease failing institutions into the mainstream of successful banks. If failing banks can be bought by healthy institutions, the problem is taken care of in a calm manner involving minimal assistance from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. On the other hand, if no buyer is willing to assume a failing bank, then the bank must be closed—even if it is the only one in the community it serves—and Federal funds are required to pay off insured deposits.

H.R. 5565 modifies current law to facilitate the process of healthy banks acquiring failing banks. The FDIC would be permitted to sell, merge and manage problem banks and S&Ls before they actually fail. The legislation would also grant the regulators additional authority under which interstate acquistions of banks and bank holding companies can be accomplished. Interstate acquisitions are necessary because often there are no buyers within the State where the bank is failing. This could be because of the size of the State, or more likely, because the economy of the entire State is depressed.

Another factor in the safety and soundness issue is the very troubled thrift industry. Without cost to the taxpayer, the bill recapitalizes the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation. This action is absolutely essential—every day that we put this legislation off means more money will be needed in the future. Ed Gray, Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, warns that there are currently 130 thrifts requiring Federal help, and that the costs involved will range from $7 to $10 billion. Yet the primary reserves of the FSLIC fund have dropped to $2.5 billion.

Not only money is at stake with the FSLIC recapitalization. I also fear a disastrous loss of confidence in our Nation's Federal thrift institutions unless decisive and timely action is taken by Congress. A panic along the lines of Maryland and Ohio could fatally harm the healthy S&L's and would certainly create chaos in the economy.

Mr. Speaker, the bill before us today also includes two pieces of legislation which have already been overwhelmingly approved by this Chamber, but have yet to be considered in the other Chamber. They are the Housing Act and Expedited Funds Availability Act.

The reason we need a comprehensive housing bill are numerous. Since September of last year, the House has reauthorized housing programs piecemeal. Besides consuming valuable time, legislating in this manner has led to many problems. Programs such as the Federal Home Administration Mortgage Insurance, Federal Flood Insurance, the Community Development Block Grant, the Urban Development Action Grant and others have temporarily lapsed or been on the brink of lapsing. Individuals served by these programs have been left confused and uncertain of their future.

Congress must continue its commitment of providing housing assistance for lower income and disadvantaged people. Not everyone is endowed with the gifts necessary to provide adequately for themselves and, in many cases, their families. Others have just been unfortunate enough to hit a rough spot in life: prolonged unemployment; a debilitating injury or handicap; the mental and physical problems associated with old age. Whatever the case, clean, safe and affordable housing is often a scarce commodity. The Federal Government has a major role to play in insuring that the citizens of this country are properly housed.

The Expedited Funds Act is much better described as anticheck hold legislation. It is unfortunate, but financial institutions have a record of placing unnecessary and unwarranted holds on checks deposited by their customers. This is done in spite of the fact that the banks are sometimes earning interest on customers' deposited checks before the customers can even access their own money.

Mr. Speaker, for some this is a matter of inconvenience and lost dollars of interest. For others, check holds can even mean the difference between having food on the table or being able to pay the month's rent. There are many persons who absolutely need timely access to their money in order to survive. This access should be available as quickly as modern technology will allow. H.R. 5576 requires financial institutions to credit local checks to customers' accounts in 1 to 3 business days and within 6 days for out-of-state checks. After 3 years, the hold limit would be further reduced.

Mr. Speaker, because of the emergency nature of this legislation, I hope the House will expeditiously grant its approval so that the Senate and President may consider the measure before the end of our session.

IN HONOR OF LEONARD AND BERNARD SHAPIRO

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor of Leonard and Bernard Shapiro, brothers who are being recognized at the 1986 Trade Awards dinner as Major Achievement Award recipients. This award is given to industry leaders who have advanced bilateral trade and commerce with Israel.

Bernard and Leonard Shapiro have been recognized for many years for their philanthropic contributions. Bernard Shapiro is the past cochairman of the construction division of the United Jewish Fund, and past cochairman of the plumbing division of the City of Hope. He has held memberships with the American Diabetes Association, University Synagogue, and Guardians for Jewish Home for the Aged. Bernard and Rena Shapiro have a beautiful family consisting of their son, Alan Shapiro and daughters. Susan Gesundheit, Linda Manasee, and Gayle Simon. Bernard is president of Familian Corp.

Leonard Shapiro, chairman of the board of Familian Corp. has also found time to share with various organizations in the community. He is a member of the board of directors for the Pacoima Boys Club, the University of Judaism, where he is also chairman of the continuing education department, and the Guardians for the Jewish Home for the Aged. Leonard is past president of the 500 Club for the City of Hope. He is a member of the campaign cabinet of the United Jewish Fund and chairman of the gift advisory board to the American Diabetes Association. Leonard and Annette Shapiro have been blessed with three children, David, Joel, and Ilyse. Annette has been a driving force in fighting diabetes and has always kept me well advised on that critical issue.

It is a pleasure to share the Shapiro brothers' accomplishments with my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives. I ask that they join me in wishing the Shapiro families the best of luck in all future endeavors.

TRIBUTE TO JOHN McCAIN

SPEECH OF

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 8, 1986

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I want to join our colleagues in paying tribute to our good friend, JOHN MCCAIN, as he leaves us for what I am certain will be a continuation of his legislative career in another place.

JOHN has impressed all of us around here with his fine work on the Foreign Affairs Committee and the Interior Committee. When JOHN spoke about defense or foreign affairs, Members knew they were hearing something special because of JOHN'S background as a Navy flier and as one of that handful of American heroes who withstood the tortures of the Communists in Vietnam as a prisoner of war.

He has brought something special to the House because he is something more than a good representative of his district. His very presence reminded us all of the sacrifices that are called for in the defense of freedom. All the congressional rhetoric about a strong defense and the willingness to sacrifice could not match what he endured and what he did in service to his country.

When he came to join us, he served in another way, the way of legislation, of trying to find honorable compromise among honorable men and women, for the common good. He performed his duties admirably

JOHN, I think you are leaving the really important body, but after 30 years of service here, I may be a bit biased. Our best wishes go with you as you enter into a new stage of service to America.

THE BLUE BIRD BODY CO.

HON. RICHARD RAY

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to insert into the RECORD, a copy of a recent article that appeared in Forbes magazine.

The article is about a family of businessmen in my district that have managed to become leaders in their industry by placing great faith in Christianity and the free-enterprise system.

The Luce family's Blue Bird Body Co. has become the No. 1 producer of school buses in the world. They are competitive and safety-minded.

For years, they have been respected members of the community of Fort Valley, GA, and I am proud to represent them in Congress.

[From Forbes Magazine, Oct. 6, 1986]

IT WAS IMPORTANT TO FATHER AND MOTHER, AND IT'S IMPORTANT TO US

(By Rita Koselka)

Down in Peach County, Ga., 25 miles south of Macon, you'll find miles of pecan tree groves, peach stands, rundown houses—and a 1-million-square-foot factory framed by a sea of yellow gold. The gold isn't peaches. It's school buses: 25 acres of school buses, plus an assortment of motor homes and bus chassis. You have stumbled upon the Blue Bird Body Co. of Fort Valley.

Never heard of Blue Bird? Your children may have. Owned lock, stock and barrel by the three publicity-shy sons of founder A. Laurence Luce, Blue Bird sells around 11,000 school buses a year, at an average price of $25,000 to $37,000, including the chassis. Net worth: $80 million. On these and other figures, Blue Bird is the world's largest manufacturer of school buses.

Luce, a Ford dealer, started Blue Bird in 1932. The country was still largely rural. Public education was dominated by one-room schoolhouses within walking distance of their pupils. But school buses were about to become a growth business as education budgets exploded and elementary, junior and senior high schools consolidated. In the U.S. today there are 350,000 school buses; they carry 22 million children a day, by far the world's largest public transportation system.

Laurence Luce died in 1962, leaving Blue Bird to his three sons: George, now 65; Albert Jr., 64; and Joseph, 60. Under them, sales have grown twentyfold as Blue Bird has moved from fourth place to first in an industry of five fiercely competitive companies. Now producing in four plants—Fort Valley, plus plants in Virginia, Iowa and Canada—Blue Bird accounts for one U.S. school bus sale in three.

Who are these Luce brothers? From one angle, they are owner-managers determined to control costs and make their productive capital sweat, a habit they learned at their father's knee. Over a lunch of chicken, grits and peaches with gingerbread in George Luce's home, the brothers and their wives recalled a story from Christmas 1939 when two of the boys were home from college (Asbury College, in Kentucky). George recounts:

"My father told us, 'Boys, I can tell you almost to the penny what the sides, windows or bumpers of a bus cost. If we think the costs are too high in any area, we can try to find ways to cut those costs. Now, it costs me $500 to send you to college. From your grades, I don't think you studied more than 100 hours. That means it cost me $5 an hour for you to study. That's way too much.'"

The old man announced his plan. He would lend the boys $500 at the beginning of the year for school. The loan would be repaid by studying. The old man would reduce each loan by $1 for every hour studied before dinner—the most productive time, he figured—and by 75 cents for every study hour after dinner. The boys had to inform Blue Bird's bookkeeper of their progress daily, by postcard.

And if one of the boy's loans still had an unpaid balance by the time school was out? He had to pay it off by working summers in the plant—at 40 cents an hour (the average assembly wage in those days).

That inbred appreciation for a dollar's value is very much at the heart of Blue Bird's success. School bus orders are won through very competitive bids to state or local school boards. So being the lowest-cost producer is critical. The Luces look at the local newspapers of their competitors' hometowns to make sure that they don't miss any intelligence that could influence a bid.

This kind of attention to detail helps discourage the big automotive companies from tromping on Blue Bird's turf. "It's a complicated business," says George Luce of school bus production. "The margins are tight. We have to deal with school boards. It takes time, and you really have to know your people. It's just not their (GM's) type of business."

Ford, GM, Navistar International, among others, do participate in Blue Bird's success, but as suppliers. They all sell chassis to Blue Bird, which then builds the conventional bus bodies on top. Customers can specify the chassis of their choice. Blue Bird manufactures almost all the other parts—everything from bus seats to heating units to windows.

You cannot fully understand Blue Bird and the Luce family without first understanding the importance they attach to religious beliefs, and to creating a sense of community within the company. Prayer meetings are usually held every other week in Blue Bird's Fort Valley cafeteria. The ten-point "Beliefs of the Blue Bird Company," posted throughout the plant, begins: "We will continue to build our companies on the foundations of Christianity and the free enterprise system."

If this sounds out of place to urban sophisticates, so be it. "We really don't mean to be obnoxious about it or force it on people," says George Luce, who spent five years in Africa as a missionary. "But we don't apologize, either. It was important to my father and my mother, and it's important to us."

To a large extent, Blue Bird is Fort Valley (pop. 9,000; Bluebird work force there, 1,500). But don't label it a company town, if the label is meant to suggest exploitation. At an average $10 an hour, Blue Bird workers are well paid by local standards. The plant operates a ten-hour shift, but runs only four days a week, so there is leisure time to spend the wages. George Luce was a member of Fort Valley's biracial committee in the 1960s and swears that Blue Bird has never had an overt racial problem. The workers, more than a third of whom are black, affectionately call the brothers Mister George, Mister Buddy and Mister Joe, and the Luces know many of the workers by their first names. The emphasis is on harmony, on fitting in. The three brothers' homes, scattered throughout the rocking-chair-on-every-porch streets of Fort Valley, are not grand or out of keeping with the community.

When the talk turns to world trade or to the transformation of the American economy, the Luces do seem very oldfangled. To them, manufacturing things is the essence of U.S. industrial might, and they regret to see the oldline manufacturing base ebb against the flow of the service economy. "We like the shop environment," says George. "After all, somebody has got to make something for the service economy to do its work on. You have to create a product first."

Yet the Luce brothers have been quick to take advantage of the new capital goods spawned by the information economy. On Blue Bird's vast shop floor, computer-aided engineering systems amply demonstrate the brothers' heavy spending on productivity-enhancing investments.

Debt financing? Here the Luces do counter the modern tide. The company has taken out long-term loans only twice. Both were for modest amounts, and both were repaid ahead of schedule. A recent credit report showed Blue Bird had $45 million in cash and securities. "We were born in the Depression," George Luce drawls. "That's an experience you never can get over."

With the number of school-age Americans declining, demand for school buses is mature, at best. The Luces saw this coming. In 1963 they began making prestige motor homes called Blue Bird Wanderlodges.

We are not talking Winnebago here. The Wanderlodges—"Birds," as fond owners call them—are luxury yachts on wheels. They are between 31 and 40 feet long, have 200-gallon gasoline tanks, electric generators, full bath tubs, microwaves, VCRs, satellite dishes and every other conceivable convenience. The "cockpit" resembles exactly that, and with 475 hp diesel engines, these powerful machines drive comfortably and accelerate with ease. Retail price: between $250,000 and $350,000. Fuel mileage: 6 miles per gallon—but if you have to ask about mpg, you probably can't afford one. The 150 or so Wanderlodges Blue Bird will produce this year will represent some 20% of sales and close to half the profits (which Forbes estimates at roughly $12 million a year).

Who buys these many-wheeled mansions? Mostly retired couples, who sometimes sell their houses and spend a few years traveling in their drivable homes.

"They're the type of people who like to be catered to, yet would stand in line for an hour to get free coffee and donuts," chuckles Blue Bird President Paul Glaske of the typical Wanderlodge buyer. But customers also include Jordan's King Hussein, Saudi Arabia's King Fahd, singer Johnny Cash and the late John Wayne.

There is cloud on Blue Bird's horizon. The cloud is the Luce brothers' mortality. In their characteristically straightforward manner, they say they have had six heart bypass operations among them.

Who next will run Blue Bird? The brothers intend to pass management of the business on to three third-generation Luce sons, now aged between 31 and 34, who are learning the ropes.

On the advice of Cleveland's Léon Danco, author of Beyond Survival: A Business Owner's Guide of Continuity, the Luces opened Blue Bird's board to outside directors in 1984—"before that we had board meetings around the water cooler," jokes George—in order to bring in competent outsiders to oversee the younger Luces. In June the brothers hired Glaske as their company's first outside president. He was formerly president of Longview, Tex.-based Marathon LeTourneau, a manufacturer of heavy equipment.

But don't expect big waves from Glaske as he shepherds Blue Bird from one generation of Luces to the next. "Blue Bird," he vows, "is really what an American company should be, the type of company I can be proud to be associated with."

THE SUPERFUND CONFERENCE REPORT

HON. HOWARD WOLPE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, as cochairman of the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition, I am entering into the RECORD the following memo prepared by the Northeast-Midwest Institute on the Superfund conference report which was passed by the House yesterday. The memo contains very useful information about the tax provisions for the Superfund and I am happy to be able to share it with all my colleagues.

The memo follows:

THE SUPERFUND CONFERENCE REPORT: A REGIONAL ANALYSIS OF TAX PROVISIONS

(Prepared for the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition by Eric Schaeffer)

The conference report on H.R. 2005, the bill to reauthorize the federal Superfund program, includes a variety of taxes designed to raise money for the cleanup of abandoned hazardous waste dumps. Table 1 compares the House and Senate positions on Superfund financing with the conference report.

TABLE 1.—5-YEAR REVENUES IN SUPERFUND FINANCING BILLS

[1] House bill provided for uniform petroleum excise tax rates; conference report provides higher rate for imported oil and refined products.

BACKGROUND

The 18 states of the Northeast and Midwest have 61 percent of the sites on the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) National Priority List for cleanup. Excavation and containment work at dumpsites has come to a virtual standstill since taxing authority for Superfund expired last year. Congress twice has provided interim appropriations to keep the program funded pending reauthorization, but these funds were expended by the end of September.

Last week, EPA Administrator Lee Thomas wrote to private contractors carrying out the cleanup operations notifying them that their contracts would be terminated within 30 days if additional funds were not provided by Congress. Thomas has warned Congress that a failure to refinance the program before adjournment "would threaten the very existence" of Superfund. The Treasury Department has recommended that the president veto the conference report because it includes a new broad-based tax and a large increase in the petroleum excise tax.

BROAD-BASED TAX

The conference report, in a major victory for the House, does not include a manufacturer's excise tax, popularly known as a value-added tax (VAT). In December 1985, the leadership of the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition joined an alliance of environmentalists, taxpayer public interest groups, and major manufacturers to defeat the VAT on the House floor. Coalition members voted instead, by a three to one margin, for the Downey-Frenzel amendment, which rejected the VAT and placed the burden of financing Superfund on the oil and chemical industries thought to be the major contributors to abandoned waste sites. The VAT had been criticized as a regressive national sales tax that would fall disproportionately on the poor and elderly.

The conference report includes a special minimum corporate tax that would raise $2.5 billion in revenue for Superfund. The income subject to the Superfund levy would be calculated in the same way as the income subject to the alternative minimum tax established by the Tax Reform Act of 1985 (H.R. 3838). In other words, deductions such as capital depreciation allowances and oil depletion writeoffs could not be used to offset income.

Unlike the alternative minimum tax in H.R. 3838, which generally is limited to companies that would otherwise pay little or no corporate income tax, the Superfund levy would be imposed on all businesses. However, it would be deductible for corporate income tax purposes.

The conference report would require corporations to pay $12 for each $10,000 of taxable income (with deductions excluded) to support the Superfund program. Corporations with less than $2 million in such income would not be taxed. Like the VAT, the Superfund minimum tax would be imposed on companies regardless of their waste management practices or connection to abandoned waste sites. Unlike the VAT, it would be imposed on corporate income rather than on sales volume.

PETROLEUM EXCISE TAX

The original House bill proposed taxing oil at 11.9 cents per barrel to raise a total of $3 billion over five years, with no distinction in the tax rates between domestic and imported petroleum products. The conference report taxes domestic crude at 8.2 cents per barrel, and imported crude and refined product at 11.7 cents per barrel. The tax on domestic crude would raise approximately $1.2 billion over five years, while the tax on imported oil and refined product would raise $1.55 billion over the same period.

TABLE 2.—PETROLEUM EXCISE TAX BASE

Product	1985 volume (1,000 barrels)
Domestic crude oil	3,274,553
Imported crude oil	1,168,297
Imported refined product	454,947
Total	4,897,797

Source: U.S. Department of Energy, Energy Information Administration, 1985 Petroleum Supply Annual (Washington, D.C., 1985), p. 24.

It should be noted that Table 2 does not reflect the surge in imports and decline in domestic production that followed the dramatic drop in worldwide oil prices that took effect earlier this year. The revenue estimates in the conference report assume that imported petroleum will supply approximately half the U.S. demand for oil over the next five years.

The Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition has supported a small, uniform, across-the-board tax on all domestic and petroleum products, as reflected in the original House position, for four reasons. First, oil is the raw material from which most organic chemicals found at Superfund sites are derived. Second, oil wastes containing PCBs are common contaminants at many dumpsites; they have been identified at about 153 Superfund sites in 32 states. Third, the consumer impact is minimal. An 8.2 cent tax would raise consumer prices by only 0.2 cents per gallon of gasoline or fuel oil, assuming the entire cost of the tax could be passed forward; an 11.7 cent tax would raise prices no more than 0.3 cent. Finally, while the region is disproportionately more dependent on fuel oil for home heating, it uses relatively less gasoline on a per capita basis. Gasoline accounted for 45 percent of the nation's total petroleum consumption in 1985, while home heating oil accounted for 20 percent. Attachment B provides data on each state's consumption of all petroleum products in 1983. Texas, with 13 percent of the national total, is the nation's largest oil consumer.

The leadership of the Coalition is concerned about the higher tax rate for imported oil, which was forced on the House conferees as the price of an agreement on Superfund financing. The region is thought to be disproportionately dependent on imported oil for home heating, although reliable state by state data are unavailable. The U.S. imported 73 million barrels of home heating oil in 1985. In addition, it is likely that some portion of imported crude was used to make the 980 million barrels of home heating oil produced domestically in that year.

Table 3 compares refined oil products by type and according to whether it is domestic or imported. At least one-fourth of the domestic refined products are derived from imported crude.

TABLE 3.—REFINED PRODUCTS BY TYPE AND ORIGIN

Product	1985 domestic (1,000 barrels)	1985 imported (1,000 barrels)

Aviation fuel	441,811	14,197
Residual fuel oil	321,997	186,284
Still gas	213,181	0
Petroleum coke	166,019	0
Asphalt and road oil	146,332	12,942

The table above does not include natural gas liquids produced as a byproduct of refining. The volume of domestic refined products appearing in Table 3 is greater than the sum of domestic and imported crude oil supplies appearing in Table 2, because there is a natural expansion in volume as heavier crudes are refined into lighter, finished products.

The leadership of the Coalition is preparing a colloquy with Representative Tom Downey (D-NY), a supporter of the conference report and a long-time opponent of oil import fees. The colloquy will clarify the intent of the conferees that the 3.5 cent difference between the tax on domestic and imported oil not set any precedent for an oil import fee.

LUST GASOLINE TAX

The conference report includes a 0.1 cent per gallon tax on gasoline that will be used to provide $500 million over five years to finance EPA cleanups of underground aquifers contaminated by gasoline. Previously, the Superfund law had barred EPA from responding to sites contaminated solely by petroleum products such as gasoline. Thirteen states have reported approximately 80 percent of the gasoline-contaminated sites identified nationwide. Of these 13 states, ten are in the Northeast and Midwest: Connecticut, Illinois, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, and Pennsylvania. Four of these states—Maine, Michigan, New York, and New Jersey—have identified leaking underground storage tanks as the primary source of groundwater pollution in their jurisdictions.

OTHER TAX FEATURES

The chemical feedstock tax would be held at the current levels, and is expected to raise $1.4 billion over the next five years. A new tax on chemical imports and their derivatives is intended to offset any advantage to foreign producers that the current feedstock tax provides. Despite the vigorous support it received from House conferees, the waste-end tax was dropped at the insistence of Senator Lloyd Bensten (D-TX).

EFFECTS OF AGENT ORANGE

HON. LANE EVANS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. EVANS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, as this Congress comes to a close, we are still awaiting final word on the study to examine the effects of agent orange on veterans of Southeast Asia.

This study has run into a number of obstacles and, in my opinion, has been hampered by a lack of commitment and good faith in seeing it through.

In the meantime, thousands of veterans continue to be haunted by the effects of their service in Vietnam and by their own personal conviction that exposure to agent orange produced harmful, sometimes fatal effects.

I urge my colleagues to read the following account from the Peoria Journal Star of one notable family's suffering. While the case of Adm. Elmo Zumwalt and his son may be particularly ironic, it is a reflection of the suffering of many American veterans across this Nation.

[From the Peoria Journal Star, Sunday, Oct. 5, 1986]

HOW A MILITARY DECISION SPELLED FAMILY TRAGEDY

(By Myra MacPherson)

Adm. Elmo Zumwalt, Jr. was not just any admiral. He was the youngest four-star admiral in U.S. naval history, the youngest to serve as chief of naval operation. From 1968 to 1970 he commanded U.S. naval forces in Vietnam, and it was his decision to order the spraying of Agent Orange to defoliate the jungles along the rivers in the Ca Mau peninsula.

On the ground, below that fine, deadly mist, a young officer ran river patrol boats. He was the admiral's son Elmo III.

The son is now in the advanced stages of an extremely rare, medically baffling form of lymphoma. He has joined the battalion of Vietman veterans who survived the war but feel they are the hapless inheritors of a sinister legacy—caused by Agent Orange contaminated with deadly dioxin.

It is a Greek tragedy come to life, and as they relive it, father and son finish each other's thoughts and words. Months of watching Elmo endure massive doses of chemotherapy and radiation have deepened the lines in the admiral's face—a face of strong features and unforgettable bristling eyebrows, long caricatured in editorial cartoons.

Asked how he handled the pain, the father says softly, "Your eyes get wet." Then he quickly races on, "But the inspirational part was Elmo. Each time Elmo called up with bad news, beginning with the first call, he'd be in a semijocular mood, saying 'well, I'm lucky again, Dad, or 'The good news is . . .'"

And the bulletins were devastating. The first was four years ago, when Elmo learned that he had a specific form of cancer of the lymphatic system called nodular poorly differentiated lymphoma (NPLD).

But there was more. The next call was to tell his father that the doctor had characterized his type of cancer as very slow moving but "always fatal." A few weeks later, the incredulous doctor told them that Elmo had two completely different types of cancer, non-Hodgkin's lymphoma and Hodgkin's disease, the only recorded case of such a combination and sequence. "It was not comforting," says Elmo dryly, "to be a statistic of one."

His father looks at Elmo. "He has just a fantastic ability to cope. Never once did he call up and . . ." His voice slows. "It was always the recipient who got the tears."

Seven months ago, as a last resort, Elmo endured the excruciating pain of a bone-marrow transplant procedure. "There was a 20 percent chance of dying in the process, a 50 percent chance the cancer will come back—and a 100 percent chance of having to go through the agony, so no one goes in there lightly," says Elmo. Having survived the transplant, Elmo counts the odds—his 50 percent chance of recovery.

The next five months are cliffhangers. "If I get past the first year they feel that it is a very good sign.

"I went from no hope to having hope."

The Zumwalt tragedy has touched a third generation, Elmo's son Russell, who has a severe learning disability. (Like many Vietnam veterans—including those who won a celebrated settlement against seven chemical companies in 1984—Elmo and the admiral feel Russell is among the many deformed, retarded or learning-disabled children who were victims of genetic disorders caused by Agent Orange.)

The admiral writes in "My Father, My Son," their just-published book, "There is no question in my mind that, indirectly at least, I was responsible for Elmo's heavy exposure to Agent Orange, which makes me an instrument of his tragedy." Still, although he feels certain it caused his son's cancer and his grandson's severe learning disabilities, he steadfastly says he has no guilt about giving the order to spray the area with Agent Orange.

What is more, even knowing the toxicity—a drop of dioxin, if it could be divided equally among 1,000 people, would kill them all—Zumwalt says he would give the same order today. He clings to the view that "we reduced casualties tremendously by the use of Agent Orange. Each day we knew how many of our sailors were wounded and killed. As soon as we started the defoliation the numbers decreased dramatically."

Elmo nods, "Absolutely." There is not a second's hesitation. "In combat on those rivers you were obsessed with day-to-day survival. You could go up a canal with dense foliage over it and be shot at point-blank." After Agent Orange turned lush vegetation into landscape as barren as the moon, there were few places to hide.

"Literally thousands were saved from being killed or maimed as opposed to the hundred that are in Elmo's circumstances," Zumwalt contends. "And I believe there's an excellent probability that Elmo wouldn't be here today if I hadn't used Agent Orange."

One of his daughters, Mouzetta, says in the book, "I think Dad feels deeply responsible for the role Agent Orange may have played in Elmo's illness . . . and Russell's learning disability." And John Pekkanen, who wrote "My Father, My Son" with the Zumwalts, says, "I think he has to feel guilt; it's inescapable. But on one level they are warriors and adhere to 'It's the price you pay in war.'"

Zumwalt talks of cost/benefit ratios. "If we had to fight another war we'd be dropping our bombs close enough to our own troops to kill some of them, in order to save a lot more. It's that kind of thing you do in war. As long as we're saving more than we lose it's an action one has to consider."

But the chief of naval operations, famed for championing the rights of enlisted men, loses that distance as he speaks of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial he cannot bear to visit. "There's hundreds of names there, people whose parents and wives I wrote." The pain is in his dark brown eyes and he clears his throat. "And, uh, hundreds of people who are dead because of orders that I had to give.

"It will be a long time before I go to visit."

Elmo, the eldest of four, was a tenacious child who survived both polio and open-heart surgery. He speaks clinically about the details of his cancer—friends feel it is his way of coping—but there is an urgency to his voice as he explains why he did the book.

Elmo's primary concern was to provide for his family; he is obsessed about the care of Russell, 9, and Maya, 11. "I suddenly realized I was facing a terminal illness when I was 36 years old," says Elmo, now 40, "and that I wasn't as prepared as I should have been." Says his father, wryly, "I had always been overinsured so Elmo compensated by being underinsured."

"I have no idea whether the book will be successful, but I created a trust fund and all the proceeds will go into that for Kathy and the kids," continues Elmo.

Another reason for the book, says Elmo, was to help others struggling with catastrophic illnesses. "It was important to have people appreciate how relationships of love and support can make a difference."

Elmo speaks not only of his family, but of the men he led in Vietnam. "We initially started off not liking each other." His crew would say that was an understatement. They nicknamed him "Brass Brat III." In the book, top-gunner Geoff Martin calls Elmo a "rigid, tough (SOB) and there were times when I got so damned mad at him I felt like shooting him, but we all realized he was a good officer." His bravery broke down the animosity. He took them into territory few swift boats would enter, disobeyed orders and went into Cambodia, and, under heavy fire, captured a convoy of weapons.

The crew holds reunions; over the years, respect turned into love. "We became a band of brothers," says Elmo. All of the crew broke down and sobbed at various times during interviews for the book.

In part, "My Father, My Son" was written for his crew and other Vietnam veterans—especially those who feel they are victims of Agent Orange. Elmo's voice gets hard with anger as he speaks of one aftermath of America's most unpopular war. "We should be asking questions as to why the returning citizen-soldiers were treated like villains in their own country for over 10 years . . . The burden of Vietnam veterans who are less fortunate than I, economically and socially, has been a heavy one."

Despite those who say there is insufficient evidence of the linkage between Agent Orange and cancer, Elmo and his father point to a study in the current issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association that shows "devastating evidence that 2,4-D, one of the principal elements in Agent Orange, caused six times as many lymphomas among those farmers who used it without precaution as those who used gloves and other protective clothing."

It was 1945, just after the Japanese surrender, when Adm. Zumwalt met his wife. A 24-year-old lieutenant who had captured a Japanese gunboat, he was sailing up the Yangtze River to Shanghai to help clear the river of Japanese mines. At a dinner party in Shanghai he met Mouza Coutelais-du-Roche. Her father was a French national; her mother's White Russian family had fled to Manchuria after the 1917 revolution, then to Shanghai when the Japanese invaded Manchuria.

He recalls, "I met her on October 1st, proposed on the 7th and we were married on the 22nd." He smiles at what is obviously a long-standing family joke: "We tried to raise all four children never to do anything so foolish."

There are a few passages from Elmo's mother in the book; she still has great difficulty talking about the cancer.

Elmo was born in July 1946. A friend once said he was "born an adult." Says the admiral, "When I was away he was like a substitute father to his younger siblings."

The two recount a pivotal incident when the admiral locked the door on Elmo as he was being chased home by Tiger, the neighborhood bully who "seemed to relish beating the hell out of anybody smaller than himself." Elmo "pounded on the door but he would not let me in. I had to face Tiger head-on." It happened more than once. "Dad would never let me in the house when Tiger was after me. I never could be victorious but I got so I could fight well enough that I took some of the fun out of it for him. He had to find others to harass."

The admiral says, looking a bit chagrined, "To this day it breaks my heart to think of it. It took superhuman will power on my part not to go out and pull Tiger off. This all happened before Elmo was diagnosed as having a heart problem. After that I felt even guiltier."

But Elmo insists it was an "absolutely bedrock" lesson, teaching him how to deal with challenges larger than himself. "Facing polio as a child. Open-heart surgery. Facing the cancer . . . is the sort of thing that translated from trying to take on a kid that was clearly able to beat the hell out of me."

Despite long absences required by Navy duties, Elmo says, "Dad developed remarkably close relationships with all of us. It may sound unbelievable, but I can never remember him losing his temper at me, or at my brothers and sisters."

Zumwalt as commander of the Navy in the '70s became famous for his "Z-grams," calling for a relaxation of "Mickey Mouse restrictions" for enlisted men. They could grow beards and sideburns, drink beer in the barracks, listen to rock music. He instituted racial reforms in the supremely lily-white Navy. Despised by the old guard, Zumwalt was praised by those who credit him with damping down a powder-keg situation in the polarized Navy of the 1970s.

But make no mistake; Zumwalt's liberal tendencies stop there. "I'm schizoid," says the admiral with a laugh, "You could say I have been more liberal than many military on domestic issues and more hawkish than many on national security."

Father and son have slowed their pace, although Elmo still works on some law cases. The admiral laughs at his past lean financial years. "I retired from my top job at the Navy with a net worth of $50,000 and finished my race for the Senate (his unsuccesful 1976 Virginia bid) with a net worth of minus $90,000.

Now, says the admiral, "I've reduced my involvement in foreign policy and national security, putting the extra time into ensuring that my income remains high so that I'll be able to help Elmo and his family." He runs two companies and is on the board of six others, but is seldom away from his son's side during his treatments.

Elmo now spends more time with his children. Before his cancer, he was financially cautions to the point of being penurious. After the diagnosis, he surprised his wife Kathy with a sports car and a trip to Europe. The family says the illness has brought them closer to the important things in life.

"The most emotional thing that ever happened to me was that year in Vietnam, but the most physical agony I ever had to endure was that bone-marrow transplant," says Elmo of the experimental process they are praying will save his life.

It is the autumn of their reprive from those days four years ago when the doctor said Elmo's cancer was fatal. Still, the admiral speaks of the tension that remains—the "sword of Damocles" that hovers as they wait out the months.

But there is more time now than they once thought they had.

Before the transplant, Elmo had been so prepared for the worst that he wrote letters to the entire family. They were to be opened only after his death, but five weeks after the transplant the admiral could not resist opening his letter.

Both in Vietnam and with my cancers, we fought battles and lost. Yet, we always knew even when the battle was clearly desperate, that our love could not be compromised, and that however bad the odds, we were incapable of ever giving up. . . .

How I loved you. How I would have loved to have continued to fight the battles by your side. You always made a difference. You made my last battle, the journey to death, more gentle, more humane.

I love you,

Elmo.

CALAIS ADVERTISER CELEBRATES 150TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. OLYMPIA J. SNOWE

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, one of the vital components of eastern Maine has just celebrated its 150th anniversary. The Calais Advertiser, founded in 1836 as a twice weekly paper, continues today in its proud tradition of being more than just a news outlet. The Advertiser has helped shape the events that make Calais a community on the move here in the 1980's.

It is also important to note that the Advertiser is, as a recent editorial pointed out, very much a team product. Since the paper appears through the efforts of so many people, bylines are omitted to portray the group endeavor.

I want to join in congratulating the Calais Advertiser on its 150th anniversary, and extend my wishes for continuing success and journalistic excellence in the years ahead.

Mr. Speaker, I am submitting the following article tracing the history of the Calais Advertiser for the RECORD.

"OUR" HISTORY

(By Jay Hinson)

"The Calais Advertiser", one of the oldest newspapers in North America, was born in August 1836. Called "The Gazette and Advertiser", the paper was published every Tuesday morning by two businesmen named Snow and Jackson. The paper was vigorous and forceful, and had as its first editor, James Shepherd Pike, who went on to a distinguished career as Washington, D.C. correspondent and associated editor of "The New York Tribune", and as ambassador to The Netherlands, appointed by President Abraham Lincoln. Pike, incidentally, was also a prominent businessman and civic leader and was the person who installed the milestones between Calais and Robinston where he had a summer home, The Mansion House.

The price for a year's subscription to "The Advertiser and Gazette" was $2.50 and grocery products were accepted as payment for advertisement. The following can be found in the August 16, 1836 copy of "The Advertiser and Gazette", the first copy to have been printed, "Any person who will procure us six responsible subscribers shall receive the seventh copy gratis".

In 1836, eastern Maine was enjoying a considerable boom. The population was increasing rapidly and the financial status of many people was in good shape. In the first issue of "The Advertiser" it was stated that Calais had grown from 1,685 in 1830 to 3,202 inhabitants in 1836. Two banks had just opened in Calais and another in St. Stephen, N.B. People were awake and alive.

All these activities were interrupted by the financial crash of 1837. "The Advertiser and Gazette" suspended publication in 1838 but began operation again as "The Calais Advertiser" in 1841.

The newspaper has operated without interruption since that time.

Another great figure who acted as editor of "The Advertiser" from its revival in 1841 was John Jackson. He waged a relentless battle against Democrats; pro-slavery advocates, "rum sellers", employers who underpaid or mistreated their employees, and wasteful lumber operators for more than 40 years.

In those days, the presses were simple and crude. True, one or two men could manage the entire operation of printing, editing and reporting but it was difficult work. The type all had to be set by hand, and it was said that editor Jackson seldom wrote out any news story or editorial. He saved time by setting it up directly. John Jackson was followed as editor by his sister. Miss Lizzie Jackson, and she, in turn, was followed by Al Smythe. They kept the paper going, but the machinery and equipment was worn and outmoded. New inventions such as electrical and gasoline run engines were being used to power the presses and "The Advertiser" went behind the times. From a circulation of 5,200, "The Advertiser" dropped to about 300 printed copies a week. To keep the townspeople from realizing the decline, the basket which took the newspaper to the post office was first filled with scrap paper, and then the fresh copies were placed on top.

In 1899, the paper was purchased by 12 local men who were interested in seeing the paper kept up. The firm was re-named "The Calais Advertiser Publishing Company", and the dozen saviors were called the "Twelve Apostles". Charles Rose was hired as editor and the paper began to improve its position. The last of the "Twelve Apostles" was the late Frank Beckett, Sr., a Calais merchant, active until his death a few months before he would have been one hundred years old.

Waide Randall was a very kind and generous man who was a watch repairman before his father-in-law, Charles Rose, left his shares of the newspaper to Waide's wife. With the assistance of the remaining members of the "Twelve Apostles", Randall guided "The Calais Advertiser" through the thin years of the Depression when a year's subscription was only fifty cents and a column inch of advertising was half that. Randall took the newspaper through the worrisome Forties and into the late Fifties with the help of such popular writers as Arthur Kallenberg and historian Ned Lamb. During this time the paper was located on North Street.

On January 2, 1958, he sold "The Calais Advertiser" to Jay B. Hinson, who has been bureau chief for The Bangor Daily News for five years and a graduate of Colby College. Hinson purchased new equipment and about a year after the purchase, moved the shop to the former railroad station on Hog Alley where he continued to modernize the plant and expand the commercial printing part of it. In 1962 the newspaper shifted from letterpress (hot type) printing to offset.

When Hinson bought the newspaper in 1958, the subscription price per year was two dollars so he took the bull by the horns and jacked it up to what it had been when the first edition was published in 1836—$2.50 a year. With support from the community most of the time, "The Calais Advertiser" worked to have the city dump moved off Main Street, sought to have highways and streets improved, urged citizens to participate in their own government, rapped the knuckles of politicians and city managers and police chiefs believed to be inept, chided bureaucrats and praised the efforts of business people who worked through the doldrums of the early Sixties, survived the recession of the mid-Seventies and labored to bring forth an ever-improving community in the Eighties.

In 1967 Hinson and Eugene Townsend of Calais purchased "The Machias Valley News Observer", the only other weekly newspaper in Washington County. Formed in 1852, that newspaper, with a circulation of 3,800, covers coastal and western Washington County.

"The Calais Advertiser" steadily maintains a circulation of 4,000 to 4,500 copies each week, depending on the season. In 1983, Hinson sold the commercial printing part of the business to one of his sons, Eric, and moved the newspaper office to Knights Corner on North Street.

While publisher and editor of "The Calais Advertiser", Hinson served as executive secretary of the Calais Chamber of Commerce in the early Sixties; was chairman of the Washington County Development Authority which spent $275,000 on boat launching sites and parks, including West Quoddy Head State Park, helped to form the city's first planning board and was president of the Calais Lions club for one year. He is still active with the newspaper in Machias and with commercial photography.

The new owner of "The Calais Advertiser" is Ferguson Calder who took over on October 5, 1985.

GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY OF THE NATIONAL FORESTS OF TEXAS

HON. CHARLES WILSON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, October 13, the U.S. Forest Service celebrates the Golden Anniversary of the National Forests of Texas. Four of the five Texas National Forests are in my district, providing natural beauty, recreation and livelihood for east Texas. Without the contribution of the U.S. Forest Service, there would be no forest area in Texas. The thick woodland we now enjoy was stripped and barren 50 years ago, when reclamation and reseeding began on the newly acquired Federal land. I submit for the RECORD, to mark this important date, the following proclamation.

PROCLAMATION

Whereas on October 13, 1986 the U.S. Forest Service will observe the 50th anniversary of the National Forests of Texas; and

Whereas the National Forests of Texas have led in the conservation and protection of one of our most important natural resources; and

Whereas the U.S. Forest Service has successfully managed the thick woods of East Texas for multiple use including recreation, and as a result attracted thousands of tourists to enjoy the pristine beauty of nature; and

Whereas the National Forests of Texas have improved the economy in the East Texas Piney Woods, where the forests are located, through increasing the productivity of those timberlands and by returning a percentage of the income from the sale of the timber to local governments and school districts; and

Whereas the National Forests in Texas have demonstrated a great influence in the State on the economy and environment, as well as providing recreation, tourism and beautification with favorable and positive nationwide publicity;

Now, therefore, be it hereby proclaimed that as the member of the U.S. House of Representatives for the 2nd District of Texas, I praise and pay tribute to the Forest Service on the occasion of the Golden Anniversary of the National Forests of Texas.

HONORING THE B.P.O. OF ELKS

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct honor to bring to the attention of this body the 100th anniversary of the funding of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks on October 23, 1986.

The B.P.O. of Elks is a fraternal organization since 1886 that rose from the humble beginnings in New York City where a group of actors joined together for fellowship and brotherly love. With a strong tradition of charitable work, the Elks boast over 2,285 lodges and 1,600,000 members nationwide. Fiercely patriotic to our country and believers in God, the Elks are supporters of such worthwhile community needs as veterans' programs, youth activities, and drug awareness. Specifically, the Youngstown Lodge No. 55 is most active in fighting cerebral palsy; helping needy families by providing disaster relief; and always coming to the aid of our country in time of need.

I share the Elks' commitment to our Nation's children and its priority to help our young people by its creation of a Youth Activities Committee. Through scholarships and grants to students, the Elks are insuring a quality education for many needy students, the leaders of tomorrow.

The Elks have embarked on a recent project that is near and dear to my heart—that being drug awareness. To quote Exalted Ruler Roland Brothers, "We are using every weapon at our disposal to stop this terrible cancer of the mind, especially for children grades 5 through 8." On behalf of this auspicious body, I want to commend the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks for their work in this area and congratulate them on the celebration of their 100th year.

AGRICULTURAL PESTS IN THE MAILS

HON. TONY COELHO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that would strengthen our current laws prohibiting the use of first-class mail for the transport of plant materials that could contain harmful agricultural pests. The mails provide a pathway for entry of serious agricultural pests into my home State of California, which poses potential problems to all farmers. We have to take some action to prevent any additional harm to our agricultural products such as the Medfly incident that occurred a few years ago.

Recent evidence has shown that the problem of first-class mail containing agricultural pests is growing in California. On June 5, 1986, a 14-pound jackfruit was intercepted in first-class mail from Hawaii. It was found to be infested with a scale and a mealybug not present in California. On July 28, 1986, soursop was intercepted and found to contain 12 larvae of the oriental fruit fly.

The eradication costs to California since 1980 for fruit fly pests have exceeded $105 million. We need to do something to prevent California or any other States in the Union from having to incur these costs in the future.

Our present Postal Service policy prohibits the inspection of any first-class mail, even if it might contain these pests, unless a warrant is secured. Some means of handling parcels suspected of containing prohibited materials is needed that is less cumbersome than getting a warrant, but that protects citizens rights from having mail inspected randomly without cause. I believe the bill I am introducing is a reasonable method of addressing this problem.

This legislation would make it illegal to ship any plant or animal or related article in first-class mail unless the person or sender who submits the mail parcel agrees to allow agricultural inspection of its contents. The Postal Service would be authorized to refuse to accept any parcel suspected of containing prohibited plants or animals for which inspection is not authorized.

The Secretary of Agriculture would be required to work with the U.S. Postal Service in devising regulations for handling parcels found to contain prohibited materials. Additionally, they would be required to conduct a public education compaign to inform people of the problem and to advise them of current laws dealing with the use of the mails for such purposes. Finally, civil penalties of at least $1,000 would be authorized for those who violate this law.

While there is not time to enact this legislation during the current Congress, I am introducing the bill now to increase public awareness of the problem and to begin discussions on the need for this legislation. I intend to pursue this issue in the 100th Congress so we can bring some control to the problem of agricultural pests that are found in the mails.

TRIBUTE TO DR. FRANK HARRINGTON

HON. GEORGE (BUDDY) DARDEN

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct the attention of my colleagues to the achievements of Dr. Frank Harrington, who is celebrating 25 years as a Presbyterian minister—including 15 years as senior minister at Peachtree Presbyterian Church, one of Metropolitan Atlanta's largest religious institutions.

Dr. Harrington not only is an outstanding speaker with a fine sense of humor; he also devotes great energy to providing day-to-day assistance to members of his congregation, whether their needs are physical or spiritual.

He also is widely known for the television ministry which he began in 1972 over WSB–TV in Atlanta. That ministry has expanded to include cable television outlets throughout the Southeast. On Christman Eve, viewers nationwide hear Dr. Harrington's holiday message via WTBS television.

I have visited Peachtree Presbyterian Church on numerous occasions. Each time, I have come away with a new appreciation for both Dr. Harrington's devotion to his tasks as minister and the congregation's love for him.

During Dr. Harrington's 15 years at Peachtree Presbyterian, more than 7,000 members have been received, and the congregation has contributed more than $29 million to help spread the Gospel and assist the needy. Although the church stands in the city of Atlanta, it draws members from throughout the area—including many people from the Seventh District. My wife's aunt, Mrs. Christine Anderson, widow of the late Dr. John Anderson, is a member of Peachtree Presbyterian's board of elders.

Before his arrival at Peachtree Presbyterian Church, Dr. Harrington served as minister at the First Presbyterian Church in Hinesville, GA, and senior minister of Fairview Presbyterian Church in North Augusta, SC.

A native of Kingstree, SC, he earned degrees—with honors—from Presbyterian College and Columbia Theological Seminary. He and his wife, the former Sara Rogers, have two children, Mrs. Harold (Victoria) Franch and Susan.

Dr. Harrington has served as a member of the General Mission Board of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, and as a member of the board of directors of Columbia Theological Seminary. He also has served in various capacities with other church leadership organizations and educational institutions. He has been a member of the clergy staffs at both University Hospital in Augusta, GA, and Northside Hospital in Atlanta.

Mr. Speaker, I invite my colleagues to join me in paying tribute to the accomplishments and contributions of this outstanding religious leader, Dr. Frank Harrington.

TRIBUTE TO JOHN F. SEIBERLING

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 8, 1986

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to my good friend and distinguished colleague, JOHN SEIBERLING, who will be retiring from the House of Representatives at the end of the 99th Congress.

As a member of the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee and as chairman of the Subcommittee on Public Lands, JOHN has been instrumental in efforts to defend America's heritage. He was one of the chief architects of our Nation's wilderness protection efforts and the drive to defend America's scenic beauty. He has also worked to promote America's historical legacy through his strong advocacy for the preservation and protection of historic buildings and sites. Through these efforts, JOHN has diligently worked to preserve our Nation's legacy for future generations.

JOHN's achievements on the national level have been impressive, but he has also served Ohio's 14th District with distinction. In his eight terms, he has worked tirelessly to protect the interests of his constituents and his district has benefited from his dedication and commitment. JOHN will be remembered for a number of achievements, including his efforts to defend and protect the Cuyahoga Valley National Recreation Area. JOHN has won the respect and devotion of his constituency and his colleagues and I know that he will be sorely missed.

For my own part, I am honored to have been able to serve in this body with JOHN SEIBERLING. He has served the people of Ohio and the country with dignity, dedication, and honor. His compassion and commitment have led to many outstanding accomplishments. It is an honor to salute the 16 years of distinguished service of my good friend and colleague, JOHN SEIBERLING, and I wish him and his wife Elizabeth the very best in all of their future endeavors.

TRIBUTE TO ELDON RUDD

SPEECH OF

HON. RICHARD T. SCHULZE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 8, 1986

Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in tribute to and in honor of the gentleman from Arizona ELDON RUDD.

I've known ELDON RUDD since he came to the Congress in 1977. He's a quiet man and, like so many reticent individuals, we often miss the depth of that individual unless we take the time to watch and study him. This is true of ELDON. I could easily have missed out on knowing him better, except for an occasion I had to sit next to him at a Republican conference meeting shortly after he arrived in Washington. We got to talking about each other, where we come from, what we did in our "former" lives, that type of thing. Before long, I was listening and asking him more about his experiences and what sparked his desire to run for elected office. The details of the conversation are not important—the feelings of the man are. Common threads of motivation running throughout all his careers—and they have been many—number among them a sense of justice and patriotic pride. I know we sometimes throw those terms around a little freely, but ELDON feels them deeply and has been guided accordingly. He served in the Marine Corps during World War II, and devoted 20 years of his life as a special agent in the Federal Bureau of Investigation. In both careers, he served his country directly, and the people indirectly. In his next two careers—as a member of a county board of supervisors and Member of Congress—he has served the people directly, and his country indirectly. Odd that he would embark upon these goals? Not if you know ELDON. He is truly driven by his twin desires of justice for the people and service to his country.

So while the House of Representatives is losing a fine statesman, some other American institution or organization is sure to gain one. ELDON, I wish you and Ann continued success and happiness in all that you do.

PROPAGANDA TOUR IN KAZAKHSTAN

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, the Soviet Union continues to propagandize abroad in favor of a nuclear test ban, urging that the United States follow its example. To strengthen its case, the U.S.S.R. recently allowed a tour by foreign journalists of its nuclear test range in Kazakhstan. This member would like to share with his colleagues an Omaha World Herald editorial of September 29, 1986, discussing the test ban moratorium issue and underscoring the need for adequate means of U.S. verification of treaty provisions subject to discussion at the Reagan-Gorbachev upcoming summit talks.

[From the Omaha World Herald, Sept. 29, 1986]

PROPAGANDA TOUR IN KAZAKHSTAN

The Soviet Union didn't strengthen its case for a nuclear test ban the other day when it allowed a group of foreign journalists to tour its nuclear test range in Kazakhstan. The world already knew that the Soviets have discontinued nuclear tests. Two non-government U.S. observers have even been allowed to set up monitoring stations nearby.

Moscow has never been shy about capitalizing on a propaganda opportunity, however. Letting foreign journalists describe and photograph the rusting rails and abandoned machinery at the test range was just that—propaganda. See how firmly we hold the high moral ground, the Soviets seemed to say. See how deeply we want peace.

In 1963, the United States and the Soviet Union formally agreed to halt nuclear tests in the air, in the sea and in space. In 1974, they decided to limit underground tests to 150 kilotons.

Last year, the Soviets paused in their underground nuclear testing on the 40th anniversary of Hiroshima and urged the United States to do likewise. The Soviets had just finished a series of nuclear tests. The United States, which had additional tests scheduled, declined to halt its testing program.

In December, just before the United States made an underground test on a nuclear device for the Strategic Defense Initiative, the Soviets extended their moratorium. The United States again declined.

The United States has taken the position that testing is needed to maintain efficient weapons. American officials have said that the United States would be willing to consider a formal treaty banning underground nuclear tests. But the treaty would have to include adequate means for verification. And the United States would have to be convinced that a test ban would not simply lock in a Soviet advantage.

The propaganda show at the test range did nothing to discredit this reasonable U.S. position.

NOTRE DAME HIGH SCHOOL IN WEST HAVEN, CT, CELEBRATES 40TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. BRUCE A. MORRISON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to share with my colleagues my pride in the 40th anniversary of Notre Dame High School in West Haven, CT.

Notre Dame was founded in 1946 by the Brothers of the Holy Cross. Today it has 7,700 alumni and 860 students from New Haven West Haven, Hamden, and other towns as distant as Guilford, Meriden, and Beacons Falls.

Notre Dame is known throughout the region for academic excellence and a strong tradition of leadership and service to the community. A long list of its former students have distinguished themselves in athletics, business, medicine, law, and other fields.

On October 11, I will join with many distinguished colleagues and friends at the first annual Notre Dame High School Knights of Honor Dinner to celebrate this happy occasion and to honor seven individuals who have provided distinguished service to Notre Dame as alumni, faculty, and loyal friends.

They are: Nicholas Pietrosante, a Notre Dame football legend who went on to a distinguished career at Notre Dame University and on the Detroit Lions and the Cleveland Browns, and now a leading area businessman; Elizabeth Panza, who has served Notre Dame in many capacities, notably as president of the Mothers Club and the Alumni Mothers; Lawrence Tierney, M.D., who donated countless hours of medical services to Notre Dame athletes in the 1950's and 1960's; Brothers Theodore Oliveira, C.S.C., and Benjamin Sunday, C.S.C., two of Notre Dame's outstanding teachers; the late Raymond G. Tessier, a Notre Dame teacher-coach for over two decades; and the late Superior Court Judge Frank Kinney, a member of Notre Dame's first graduating class and leading Connecticut jurist, whose untimely death only a few days ago shocked and saddened us all.

Guests at the dinner will include Mayor Biagio DiLieto of New Haven, Mayor Azelio Guerra of West Haven, Probate Judge E. Michael Heffernan, Brother Francis Leary, C.S.C. Principal, Nicholas Cusano, chairman of the board, Rev. James G. Fanelli, superintendent of schools, Archdiocese of Hartford, William T. O'Brien, chairman of the Knights of Honor Committee, and many alumni and friends of Notre Dame.

Mr. Speaker, I know all my colleagues will join me in honoring Notre Dame High School and its seven "Knights of Honor."

CITATION FOR DISTINGUISHED SERVICE TO GUY W. WILLEY

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the distinguished career of a dedicated public servant, Mr. Guy W. Willey. The U.S. Department of Interior recently bestowed its highest honor, the Distinguished Service Award, on Mr. Willey for his many contributions in the field of wildlife conservation with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Interior Secretary Donald P. Hodel, stated in his citation:

Throughout his eminent career at the Blackwater National Wildlife Refuge [NWR], Mr. Willey's sincere dedication to wildlife conservation has significantly contributed toward gaining national recognition for the refuge as a unique wildlife management area. He has an exceptional talent for communicating his concerns and knowledge of the marsh and wildlife with everyone from local residents to students to professors to ambassadors. As a result, Mr. Willey has gained the support of many with very positive tangible benefits. During the period when Blackwater NWR was experiencing rapid marsh losses, Mr. Willey was the moving force in a study program proposed by the University of Maryland and provided invaluable assistance in implementing recovery programs for the Delmarva fox squirrel and the southern bald eagle.

Mr. Willey's list of achievements go on to include the reestablishment of new colonies for the fox squirrel, and development of a protected area for the bald eagle. In addition, he served on the State of Maryland's Trapping Advisory Commission and helped to write new trapping statues for the State.

I join the Department of the Interior on behalf of the residents of Maryland's First Congressional District and salute Mr. Guy Willey for his outstanding dedication to the preservation of the Chesapeake Bay and the natural environment of the wildlife in and around the State of Maryland.

IN HONOR OF JESSE AND JOAN FELDMAN

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Jesse and Joan Feldman as they will be honored by the JWB on December 7, 1986.

Jesse will receive the first JWB Community Builders Award for his volunteer achievements, leadership in the San Francisco JCC and community, an active national involvement in JWB and for serving as an inspiration and a role model for others.

Jesse Feldman is a JWB vice president and chairman of its Israel Committee. He has been on JWB's board of directors since 1968. In that time he has served in many different capacities. A past president of the United Jewish Community Centers of San Francisco and the Jewish Community Federation of San Francisco, the Peninsula, Marin and Sonama Counties, and former chairman of the Jewish Community Relations Council in San Francisco, he has also served as a vice president of the Council of Jewish Federations.

An attorney, Mr. Feldman was founding partner of the San Francisco law firm Feldman, Waldman and Kline. He remains active in a number of business and community organizations in his native city.

He and his wife, Joan, live in San Francisco and spend part of the year in Jerusalem, Israel.

Jesse and Joan have been especially important to me personally, as devoted community leaders, as wonderfully caring people, as special friends, and as my very own cousins.

It is a pleasure to share the news of this special tribute with my colleague in the U.S. House of Representatives. I ask that they join me in wishing the Feldman's the best of luck in all future endeavors.

TRIBUTE TO ELDON RUDD

SPEECH OF

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 8, 1986

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, our colleague and friend ELDON RUDD has decided to retire after 10 years of distinguished service in this body. I want to join the rest of our colleagues in honoring the legislative career of this fine gentleman.

ELDON came to us after serving his country in the Federal Bureau of Investigation. As a member of the Appropriations Committee and as a strong supporter of President Reagan's foreign and defense policies during the past 6 years, ELDON RUDD has brought to his legislative tasks the same kind of dedication and patriotism he demonstrated in the FBI. In the fight against communism around the world, he has always been an informed and eloquent champion of western values.

He has served his district, his State and his country with distinction, as a citizen, as an FBI man and as a Member of this House.

Let me say personally that I will also miss his sartorial splendor which brought to us all the energy and bright color of his native Southwest.

ELDON, we will miss you.

HELP PENSION LOSERS BECOME WINNERS

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to have joined as an original cosponsor of legislation designed to assist over 80,000 senior citizens in this Nation whose pension plans were eliminated between 1942 and 1974, thus depriving these workers of much-needed income they had rightfully earned after years of hard work in our labor force. These people have come to be known as pension losers.

Although the Employee Income Security Act provides compensation for workers whose pension plans were terminated after 1974, this arbitrary cut-off date has left thousands of additional workers stranded with no compensation, no pension, no retirement income at all. This is a tragedy that must not be allowed to continue. Our Nation's citizens have been told by our Federal Government and President Reagan that the Government is not going to bear the responsibility for their welfare after they retire. Yet what about the thousands of people across our Nation who have worked many long and hard years planning for their retirement—only to have their plans dashed through no fault of their own. The Federal Government is the only entity that can provide relief to these individuals.

As an original member of the House Select Committee on Aging, I have long worked to improve the plight of our elderly population. This bill represents a reaffirmation of my commitment to do just that. I have cosponsored this legislation in the past. I joined as a supporter of this bill and believe it is time for us to act.

It is my understanding that this issue will be a priority of Mr. CLAY and the Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations next year. I want to commend the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. CLAY, for his insight in introducing this bill and I certainly look forward to working with him on this important issue during the next session of Congress.

The beneficiaries of this legislation are those workers who embody the American work ethic. They represent the spirit of this Nation and they should not be penalized in their retirement years. I pledge my commitment to ensure that these workers receive some compensation and that this terrible injustice is given meaningful consideration in the upcoming session of Congress.

PEPSICO'S ROGER ENRICO ON THE THREE "E'S" OF EMPLOYMENT, EDUCATION, AND ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

HON. JACK F. KEMP

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, I recently had the opportunity to read the remarks made by PepsiCo's pathbreaking president and CEO, Roger Enrico, before the Memphis Chapter of the NAACP. Roger spoke eloquently about the need to create an opportunity society where all people have the chance to succeed and fulfill their dreams. I hope my colleagues will take the time to read Mr. Enrico's interesting and uplifting speech.

REMARKS OF ROGER A. ENRICO

MEMPHIS BRANCH, N.A.A.C.P. FREEDOM FUND DINNER, MARCH 27, 1986

Thank you.

Good evening, ladies and gentlemen.

I bring you greetings from my fellow New Yorkers and extend our condolences for the recent loss by Memphis State in the NCAA playoffs.

We share your grief as we too mourn the loss by our St. John's team in the Western Regional playoffs.

Well, at any rate, I'm sure you'll be waiting until next year to cheer the Tigers on to victory. Just as we'll be cheering for the Redmen of St. John's.

On a more uplifting note, I want to say how good it is to be with you tonight. And to thank you for the chance to speak to you this evening.

You know, when Ben Hooks called me a few weeks ago and asked me to speak at this event, my first reaction and immediate response was: I'd be delighted.

I was delighted to accept because it's an honor to speak to this group. The N.A.A.C.P. has done more to bring out the best in this Nation than any organization I know.

Besides, no one says no to Maxine Smith!

But I was really delighted to accept because I consider Ben Hooks a good friend.

My second reaction, though, was: What in God's name am I going to talk about?

Do I give you a litany of all the things Pepsi-Cola Co. and it's bottlers have done to support your cause? Do I tell you about fighting the cola wars? About my experiences with Michael Jackson?

Well, I could talk about those things. It would be easy for me to do so, and hopefully easy for you to listen to.

But I decided not to take the easy route. Instead, I'd like to talk to you about three critical areas I see facing the black community: Economic development, employment, and education.

I want to share with you my perspective on these three "E's" because I feel that the progress we make in those areas will drive the level of success that blacks and other minorities achieve within our society.

(Pause.)

And I'm also going to talk about a new mood that is sweepting the Nation—a mood that promotes togetherness without sacrificing individualism—a mood that puts making things happen on top of the list—a mood where people are saying: "I can—can you? OK—Let's get it done!"

(Pause.)

You know, a man once asked Billy Graham to explain the difference between Heaven and Hell.

That's easy, Reverend Graham said. Heaven is a wonderful place. Because in Heaven, the natural order of things is in perfect balance.

In Heaven, the British are the cops, the French are the cooks, the Germans are the mechanics, the Swiss are the administrators, and the Italians are the lovers.

But Hell, he said, is an entirely different matter. Because in Hell the Germans are the cops, the British are the cooks, the French are the mechanics, the Swiss are the lovers, and the Italians are the administrators.

(Pause.)

Well, any of you who have spent some time in Europe have probably observed that nationalities do tend to excel in some things, and perhaps from that perspective, there is a bit of truth to that story.

But the dream of America, the magic of this bold human experiment, is that distinctions like those aren't supposed to apply in our country.

And neither are distinctions of race or of religion.

We Americans believe in a revolutionary human concept, called freedom. And we also believe in equal opportunity for everyone to make it according to his or her own drive, vision, and ability.

Yes, we Americans believe in those things, but we all know it doesn't work that simply. It's not that easy. If it were, the struggle would have been over a long time ago.

(Pause.)

Is there anyone who doesn't remember the struggle and the pain endured by those who were in the civil rights fights of the 1950's and 1960's?

Well, let's get out there and remind them.

(Pause.)

And remember the tremendous gains from laws passed in State and Federal legislatures to protect the civil rights of black Americans in the 1960's and 1970's?

Well, almost a quarter of a century later, we're still faced with a social condition that is not dramatically different from that which existed before all those laws were passed.

To be sure, there have been some successes. But we should all be well aware of the 18 percent unemployment which exists among black Americans, and the 40 percent unemployment among black teenagers.

And fewer black high school students are enrolling in colleges today than was the case just 10 years ago.

Now, we've got to ask ourselves, why is this?

Well, I'd like to offer one highly plausible reason: I think that we may very well have neglected to recognize the fact that the tactics and weapons we should be using to fight today's battles need to be alot different than those used so successfully 25 years ago.

(Pause.)

You see, people, not laws, populate this Nation, and people will make the difference if the social condition in America is to be corrected.

Think about it.

People—each of us—have the capacity for compassion and fair play, and the bravery necessary to bring it about. But people—you and I—also have the ability to be selfish, deceitful and cowardly.

The single most important element that will make the difference in how you and I and all Americans act is the quality of our leadership.

Leadership in a Nation is what brings out the best qualities in its people and surpresses the worst.

(Pause.)

Notice, I didn't say our Government—I said our leadership.

For the two are not necessarily synonymous. The late Roy Wilkins never held an elected position in this Naiton. And neither was the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King a government official

They were both true leaders, however, and they both captured the imagination of the American public like no government official every did.

They did so by appealing to the best within us all. And we saw in Wilkens and King, and others like them, integrity and dignity. We saw in their ideas and their leadership something more powerful than all of the laws, and all of the governments, and all of the armies of the world.

We saw morality and decency and a sense of fair play.

(Pause.)

Today, Americans are sick of big government. They are sick of big spending. They are sick of deficits. They are sick of too many laws, too many lawyers and too much paperwork.

They're sick of those things because they don't work very well. They just don't get the job done no matter how many billions they throw against it.

But Americans are not sick of doing what's right and what's good. Deep inside them, there is the desire to help the poor and feed the hungry.

Deep inside there is the will to fight discrimination. Deep inside there is the will to fight for equal opportunity for all.

But to bring these qualities from deep inside to the outside where they can do some good requires leadership. Leadership is the fuel that makes the machine run.

(Pause.)

And so tonight, I am asking you to look at the world, to look at what you're trying to accomplish right here in Memphis, in a different way than you may have in the past. I am asking you to achieve. Be a winner.

(Pause.)

If you're looking in the direction of Washington, you're looking the wrong way. Because Government is not the answer—you are.

Yes, Government can and should play an important role, but not anywhere near as important as yours. Speak to the people, energize them. Bring those fundamental American beliefs to the surface again, and do that with the power of your ideas, your integrity and your dignity.

Ganhdi changed the world. King changed the world. Mother Theresa is changing the world. Let us change the world, too. Let us unshackle the human spirit. Let us set loose the brilliance and creativity and love that's in every human being in this Nation.

(Pause.)

It can be done. Everywhere I go in this great country, from Maine to Florida, from Wisconsin to Texas, from California to Memphis, TN, I see a rekindling of enthusiasm and spirit.

I see a resurgence of optimism, an optimism that says all things are possible.

I see people demonstrating for real that the free enterprise system under which we operate gives the individual untold opportunities to make a difference.

And I mean a difference in areas that count.

I'm talking about the three E's I spoke about earlier; Education, Employment, and Economic Development.

Of the three, economic development deserves our principal focus, because only after gains have been made in this economic power of black enterprise can satisfactory levels of employment result.

Increased employment levels will then give our young people the necessary incentive to remain in high school and pursue their education at the college level.

Right now, we, at Pepsi-Cola, are addressing the economic development of the black community through our minority purchasing program.

We recognize that if we are to ever make a major contribution to the overall social condition, it's going to be through our normal day-to-day operations.

And so today, Pepsi has pioneered one of the most aggressive minority business enterprise programs in the country, a program in which we spend millions of dollars each year to purchase services from minority vendors—minority entrepreneurs with visions and dreams.

Let me give you a few examples.

There is the case of a minority research firm that was given a temporary assignment to do ethnic research by one of our departments trying to reach its minority purchasing goal.

They began to work at Pepsi because of our minority business enterprise program.

They have stayed at Pepsi over the last 3 years because of their performance.

Another example is that of the minority car dealership's which currently supply Pepsi with all of the vans we use.

In fact, over the next 5 years, we'll be spending upward of $150 million with minority-owned businesses.

And our managers have learned to ask the question: Why not a minority supplier? And the result has been more minority suppliers, more economic clout for the black community, and improved services and costs for us.

A win-win for everyone, if I've ever seen one.

(Pause.)

A minority business enterprise program, such as the one just described, results in more than just increased sales for the minority business.

It's ultimate effect is like the stone thrown in the water where ripples are continually made.

Top U.S. corporations last year showed sales increases of about 4 percent; but gross sales of the top 100 black businesses expanded by nearly 8 percent.

Now, most of these 100 black businesses were small businesses.

But small businesses are the ones which drive the economy of this Nation and create the overwhelming majority of all new jobs in America. And they can do it in the black community like no government ever can.

(Pause.)

A minority business enterprise program which yields employment opportunities in the black community is sure to lead to a renewed sense of purpose for black teenagers, and increase enrollment levels at high schools and colleges.

Which brings us to the third "E": Education.

The American economy has moved from one which relied heavily on manufacturing, to one which is more service and information based.

Fewer and fewer are the workers who can rely solely on hands and muscle power to make a decent living. Instead, knowledge of basic business skills are becoming more and more in demand.

Who will fill the jobs in the tommorrows to come? The answer must be obvious. Our children must—all of our children.

Together, we must provide the leadership to get our young people to stay in school and achieve an education.

At Pepsi, we recognize this, too.

In fact, Pepsi was the first company to give $1 million to the United Negro College Fund. And this, thank goodness, has started a trend of million-dollar gifts to that great group of institutions.

And, our company has developed a remarkable relationship with the National Association for Equal Opportunity in Higher Education, and its 114 historically black colleges and universities, to more effectively market these fine institutions to prospective students and potential donors.

In addition, we've established an intern program for college-aged minorities in which more than 50 young people participated last year. They work in and learn about our business, earn an excellent salary while doing so, receive a scholarship from us to help complete their education, and an offer to permanently join our company upon graduation.

(Pause.)

But, you say, Pepsi is just one company.

(Pause.)

Well, I say our challenge—yours and mine together—is to multiply these efforts a thousandfold. I mean creating a spirit so infectious that it spreads throughout the land.

Think about that for a moment. Really think about it.

Sure, Pepsi is just one company, and you are just a local NAACP chapter. But what would happen if more chapters and more companies—the entire Fortune 500—joined us in this effort? And what would happen if we added the determination and commitment of all Americans north, south, east, and west?

Well, I'll tell you what would happen—those Pepsi successes would be multiplied several thousandfold. And your NAACP fair share program would multiply its many successes.

The $150 million minority business program could become $10 billion. The support of historically black colleges could grow beyond your most fervent dreams, and those 50 interns could become 50,000—or even 500,000 interns.

Now that's true progress. That would make the real difference we all seek.

(Pause.)

But you know as well as I, that progress like that demands a price.

And my friends, the buck not only stops here, it has to start right here.

As community leaders, ours is the responsibility of forming the leading edge of change—change that makes things better.

We are the ones who set the standards who raise the level of progress to more lofty heights. We are the ones who must lead the way for the next generation—and the next after that.

And we can do those things. We have the power—we are in the right. What we need is the vision. The courage, and the determination to make it happen—to get it done.

And I say we can do those things because I see today a new sense of national spirit, a new sense of commitment. Some polls even conclude that we're beginning a new ethic of commitment.

(Pause.)

OK, I've tooted Pepsi's horn a bit tonight—but that's not why I came here. I used those examples to illustrate that great things can be accomplished when we commit ourselves—when we let all that is good and noble about us rise to the surface.

And to demonstrate to you that, despite the big problems we face, there really is more potential right now to make things better than they've been in a long time.

Of course there is a lot more to be done much more.

But I can see the day when our efforts are rewarded—when opportunities for all Americans are truly equal and bountiful.

Every trend I look at says there's opportunity for growth in all areas. We can see that every day—everywhere we look. Many of the products and services out there today were unheard of just a few years ago. And more new products and services keep being produced.

This Nation is going to need people to develop them, manufacture them, package them, install them. Brown people, white people, yellow people, black people—or, my friends, just people—period.

That alone can be a shot in the arm for our work force. And a boon to new employment in cities like Memphis—if we get out there and make sure it happens.

That is our challenge—that is our quest.

To meet it, we'll need to strike a new balance between what Government must do and what the private sector—Business and citizens—will contribute.

But I know we will do that. I know that no matter what the obstacles are, we'll manage to get through.

We always do.

We're a resilient people.

We're a Nation of pride and promise and optimism.

A Nation of hope and opportunity and challenge.

Our future—yours and mine—is where it always has been—right here in our own hands.

Together, we can shape it to be as terrific and fulfilling and meaningful as we want it to be.

Tonight, let us rededicate ourselves. Let us make sure that the future is just that.

Let's give this Nation what it needs, What it is thirsting for: Leadership. Aggressive—determined—uplifting—towering leadership.

Let's get up there, like Wilkens and King did. Fly with the eagles.

Thank you very much.

IN MEMORY OF DON FORTIER

HON. HENRY J. HYDE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, on September 25, I participated in a special tribute to the late Don Fortier that was coordinated by our colleague, TOM COLEMAN. To complement the historical record of that day, I would like to share with Members three additional eulogies that recently came to my attention as they provide additional insights on why Don Fortier was such a special person. They were delivered during the Fortier Memorial Service at the Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church on September 9 by some of Don's closest associates in the Reagan administration—Adm. John Poindexter, the President's National Security Adviser whom Don served so ably as his top deputy, Assistant Secretary of Defense Richard Perle, and Dennis Ross of the National Security Council Staff. Their remarks follows:

THANKS TO GOD FOR DON'S LIFE

(Remarks by Adm. John Poindexter)

We are all indeed thankful for Don's life.

And we are all privileged to have known him and worked with him—in academia—on Capitol Hill—at the State Department—and at the White House.

Don approached the problems of the world with great vision, dedication and constancy of purpose.

His contribution to the quality of our lives and thoughts is very signficant.

Through his great intellect he brought into sharp focus that which is important to us.

And, because of his presence, we understand a little better what is possible in working to bring peace and stability to the world.

Don had a way of discussing an issue that helped all of us understand it better.

By using his hands and gestures, he would almost bring life to concepts. By sheer sincerity and conviction, he could lend credibility to an idea; and then in his gentle, disarming manner, he would once again convince us of the rightness of his solution.

Don and I went on a mission for the President some months ago.

In the long hours over the Atlantic we discussed the many aspects and intricacies of our forthcoming encounters.

Through it all Don's focused vision of our objective, his steadfastness of purpose, and his humbleness of approach were crucial to the successful conclusion of the mission.

Even while Don was sick he continued to work with the staff developing concepts for addressing many important and difficult issues.

He would not give up.

His focus was beyond himself and his illness.

We are all very fortunate to have been Don's friends—through his strength of character, we learned excellence; through his humility, we learned restraint; and through his kindness, we learned compassion.

We thank GOD for Don's presence, for the qualties that he brought, for his life of sharing, and for the difference he has made to our lives.

We will carry those memories and throughts with us forever.

DONALD ROBERT FORTIER

(Remarks by Richard Perle)

It was so terribly short, the time that we were privileged to share with Don Fortier. But privileged we were. And what was lost in time was made up in the depth of a friendship that enriched our lives, our country and the cause of freedom.

In years too few our friend and colleague burned brightly with wisdom and compassion as he worked tirelessly to make democracy more secure and the world a safer place. For no one are these words of Robert Frost more appropriate than they are for Don:

Nature's first green is gold,
Her hardest hue to hold.
Her early leaf's a flower;
But only so an hour.
Then leaf subsides to leaf.
So Eden sank to grief,
So dawn goes down to day.
Nothing gold can stay.

In the time he had—that hour of gold—Don moved all who knew him to reach for a higher standard of public service: more thought, more probing, more imagination, more facts; new solutions, new ideas, new approaches. The issue, the place didn't matter. It could be Libya or the Asian subcontinent or Central America. If some day the world is freed from the scourge of terrorism, if India and Pakistan compose their differences, if free institutions replace totalitarianism in Nicaragua, it will be in part because our friend used what time he had to listen and inquire and reflect and then to shape policies and plans and programs with a self-effacing creativity that earned the admiration of us all.

Don was the most-minded of men, guided by a combination of fierce integrity and gentle kindness.

He was more effective than anyone I know at guiding a meeting to a conclusion, coaxing from each participant the contribution he was best suited to make, teasing out ideas from people who may not have known they had them, deflecting the army of departmental nay-sayers who can be counted on to show up at the most stifling of all institutions, the interagency meeting. This great gift, so evident in Don's work, was derived not only from the exercise of a powerful, inquiring mind, but more importantly, it grew out of his thorough decency and deep humanity. He understood how to work with people because he cared about people. And it didn't take very long before they came to feel that and respond to it. Thus he could elicit compromise that eluded others; and he accomplished this by earning the trust and affection of all who knew him. My staff always cringed when my schedule showed a meeting with Don; they knew from experience that Don could fashion a compromise by wresting a cherished position—even from me.

Don harbored no illusions about the world. Tough-minded, he knew of terror and war and intrigue and corruption. But he also knew that if he worked long and hard enough, with care and deliberation and the courage of his convictions, he could make the world a better place. And this he did in the time he had.

We must be grateful for that time. There is a place in our memory to be cherished and a place in our hearts to be enlarged. One day, when Graham Fortier is old enough to understand what we now know, there will be many of us, Allision, to tell him of the pride we felt in knowing that his father was our friend.

DON FORTIER MEMORIAL SERVICE

(Remarks by Dennis Ross)

In the few minutes that I have today, I would like to talk about some of my impressions of Don Fortier. I guess the thing I enjoyed most about Don was his sense of humor. He had a great laugh, which was triggered most often when he was being kidded. Don never took himself too seriously and could always laugh at himself and at some of his passions.

Aside from his family and his work, golf was his passion. Many may know of Don's reverence for Aristotle, Lincoln, and Churchill, but few realized how high Arnold Palmer ranked in Don's pantheon of heros. One of Don's most prized possessions was a picture that Palmer had autographed. He talked about Palmer often and he loved to watch him play. I couldn't help thinking that Don had a hand in Palmer's two holes-in-one last week.

Don's admiration for Palmer simply reflectd his love for the game of golf. He loved to play golf and always liked to protect his Sundays so he could do so. He could never get enough, and it seemed that whenever he and I played we would always get out too late in the day to ever get a complete round in. But Don would always take it to the limit. He would always want to get in one last hole. Once when we were playing I told him that it was too dark to see the ball and we really ought to stop playing. But he said, "No, I can still see." I said, "OK." So I got up, hit the ball, didn't see it at all, and turned to Don asking, "Where did it go?" Without hesitating, he instantly said, "I didn't see it either, but I heard it go in that direction." The image of Don playing golf, racing around the course, trying to get in that one extra hole will always be one of my favorite.

Another favorite impression of mine was that of Don when he was writing speeches and trying to find just the right Churchill quote to insert in the speech. When he would find just the right passage, he would come and get me, pull out a cigar and read the speech, doing his best Churchill impersonation. In fact, Don's impersonations were quite good and he and I used to do them together. Typically, he'd call me up doing one of his imitations. I'd pick up the phone and hear this Kissingerian voice on the other end telling me my latest analyses were fatally flawed and that it was obviously the result of my hanging around this Fortier fellow.

Well I hung around this Fortier fellow because he was one of a kind, and he had so much to contribute. I am going to miss him, but I take some comfort in knowing that Don shaped the thinking and the approach of a great many people. That will surely be one of his enduring legacies and something that he would be very proud of.

Indeed, like a great professor whose ideas, spirit and genius live on through his students, Don has many disciples who will carry on his work. They are the people that Don brought into the government, who worked for him, who were promoted by him, or who simply benefitted from his counsel. These disciples will carry on, asking the questions Don would have asked; thinking in broad, strategic and narrow, tactical terms; having a vision of what they want to accomplish, even while they recognize the gaps between the real and the ideal, and develop plans for reducing these gaps. Don's disciples will always heed his insistence that they think through not just the first order consequences of actions, but also the second, third and fourth order consequences. And they will always reflect his determination to question their own assumptions, even as they develop plans guided by those assumptions.

That Don would have this kind of effect on people shouldn't be surprising because those who worked with him know that they were working with the best. David Halberstam may have written about people he referred to as the "Best and the Brightest." But they were neither. They too often lacked historical perspective, a sense of self-doubt, a moral compass, and a basic trust in the American public. Don was lacking in none of these areas, and his belief in the American people was deep and abiding. Perhaps that belief and that trust came from his strong but relatively simple roots in Ohio; or perhaps it came from his work on Capitol Hill and the appreciation he gained for the political process; or perhaps it came from his own deep study of American history.

Don was a very serious student of American history. When he would go on vacation and return, he would tell you not only about his golf game but also about how he had reread the Lincoln-Douglas debates and had generated new insight as a result. That immersion in our history gave Don a profound belief in America's institutions and its people. Along with everything else, that made Don the best. Halberstam may have written about the best and the brightest, but I knew the best and the brightest. Don Fortier was the best and the brightest.

WILLIAM C. HOPKINS

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor and pay tribute to an outstanding American and good friend of mine, William C. Hopkins, of Sedalia, who recently passed away. Bill Hopkins was a truly remarkable Missourian whom I had come to admire greatly.

Bill was a man who devoted his time energy to make the world around him a better place. He was a longtime leader in his community, providing leadership in several local civic organizations and in the establishment and expansion of local services. Chief among these is a community college and a children's therapy center. Additionally, Bill Hopkins was a successful businessman and served for 12 years as a special agent for the FBI.

I want the record to note publicly my respect and admiration for Bill Hopkins. Few of us can hope to match his capabilities, but all of us can benefit from an examination of his accomplishments. It is a record we should hope to emulate.

Mr. Speaker, I feel certain that our colleagues join me in extending the sincere condolences of the House to his loving wife Dorothy and their three children.

[From the Sedalia Democrat, Oct. 7, 1986]

BILL HOPKINS: A GENTLE MAN WHO WILL BE MISSED

One of the things that makes Sedalia a nice place to live is the willingness of our citizens to get involved in projects that benefit the community. Bill Hopkins, a man who exemplified that willingness for more than 30 years, passed away Wednesday.

Although he retired from his insurance career a couple years ago, he never lost his enthusiasm for public-spirited work. At the time of his death at age 71, he still was serving as president of the State Fair Community College board of trustees, a position he'd held since the school opened in 1968. He was also an active Rotarian and a Chamber of Commerce committee chairman.

Hopkins was a friendly, gentleman who will be missed by the many who knew him.

TRIBUTE TO DR. ARTHUR MARGOSIAN

HON. TONY COELHO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, this year marks a major change for the California State University, Fresno Department of Journalism. After a nearly 30-year tenure, Dr. Arthur Margosian has retired from his teaching post, and I know that CSUF faculty and students alike are making a difficult adjustment to life without their daily dose of Art's intellect, guidance and wit.

Art Margosian was born and raised in Fresno, and following a stint with the Air Force, returned in 1956, and began teaching parttime at his alma mater, then known as Fresno State College. Over the years, the institution has grown and evolved into an outstanding regional university, and Art oversaw much of the accompanying growth of the journalism program. He was not only a member of the faculty for three decades, but at various times, served as department chairman and dean of the school of professional studies. In February 1986 he was honored by the California Newspaper Publishers Association as the State's outstanding journalism teacher of the year; a fitting tribute to a deserving educator.

Along with his academic activities, Art has also been a leader in the Armenian community as the former editor of the California Courier and a spokesman for the efforts to see the Turkish government to properly recognize the facts of the Armenian genocide. In addition, he currently serves on the governing board of the California Community Colleges.

Later this month, Art will be honored by his friends, colleagues and former students at a dinner which is appropriately expected to be a sell-out. Although Art will be sorely missed by future Fresno State journalism students, he is quite deserving of his newly acquired status as a retiree. I know that his wife Mabel, and his children and grandchildren will enjoy having him around more, and as one of Art's many admirers, I would like to add my congratulations to the others he has no doubt received.

TRIBUTE TO JOHN SEIBERLING

HON. GEORGE (BUDDY) DARDEN

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 8, 1986

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join my colleagues in paying tribute to Representative JOHN SEIBERLING, who has articulated the positions of the people of Ohio's 14th District so well for the past 16 years and is retiring at the end of this Congress.

JOHN, of course, also is one of the most active Members of Congress in matters pertaining to the preservation of our environment and our historic resources. It has been a great pleasure for me to serve on the Public Lands Subcommittee of the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee.

JOHN SEIBERLING is a vigorous outdoorsman who clearly understands the need to preserve our Nation's great physical riches and beauty for the benefit and enjoyment of future generations. Under his stewardship of the Public Lands Subcommittee, more wilderness areas have been designated than during any other period since the Wilderness Act became law in 1964.

Mr. Speaker, we certainly will miss JOHN's leadership, both in the House as a whole and on the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee in particular. But I know all of us wish him well in his future endeavors, and we thank him for his years of distinguished service to his State and Nation.

CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO STANLEY J. GREJDA

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Mr. Stanley J. Grejda of Lansford, PA. On October 26, 1986, Mr. Grejda will be honored for his contributions to the community with the presentation of the AMVETS Distinguished Service Award.

Mr. Grejda is certainly deserving of this important honor. Born in Pittsburgh, he has spent much of his adult life in the Lansford area. He enlisted in the Marine Corps in April 1942 and served with distinction in the South Pacific. He has been active with AMVETS ever since.

Mr. Grejda is a hard-working family man. He and his wife, Catherine, have one son and three grandchildren. Mr. Grejda spent over 20 years working with the Tamaqua Evening Carrier and has worked with the Reading Eagle since 1971. He is especially well known in our area for his baseball skills. He was a star in the St. Michael's Church league in the 1940's and 1950's and, in keeping with his commitment to the sport, he was instrumental in founding the Lansford Little League in 1958. Since then, Mr. Grejda has served the league in a variety of capacities, including terms as president, treasurer, field manager, umpire, and as manager of several teams. Much of the league's success can be attributed to his hard work and commitment. Generations of little leaguers can attest to his devotion.

Mr. Grejda is being honored by the AMVETS for this commitment and dedication to Lansford and its little league. I commend him for his contributions and I know that my colleagues will join me in honoring Stanley J. Grejda on this important occasion and in wishing him continued success and good fortune in the years to come.

TRIBUTE TO TOM LOEFFLER

HON. RICHARD T. SCHULZE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 7, 1986

Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to pay tribute to our esteemed colleague, the Congressman from much of Texas, TOM LOEFFLER. While his departure will be a loss to us all, I am sure that my colleagues share my sentiment that Texas will be richer with TOM'S return to the ranch country he loves so much.

There is a lot I could say about Congressman LOEFFLER. His dedication to this country and his leadership, instrumental in securing the tax reductions of the early 1980's, have earned him a considerable measure of respect among his peers. TOM'S ability to work with Democrats and Independents and his knowledge of the legislative process propelled him into the Republican leadership ranks where he is currently chief deputy whip.

I am grateful to have had the opportunity to work with such a competent and intelligent legislator. Although he only turned 40 years old last month, TOM has demonstrated the wisdom and consideration of a seasoned statesman. His work on the Budget and Appropriations Committees had been exemplary, and I know that, though he is leaving this body, we will soon see TOM LOEFFLER again, leading this fellow Texans into the future.

MENTAL ILLNESS AWARENESS WEEK

HON. BOB EDGAR

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr EDGAR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate this week as Mental Illness Awareness Week and to relay to my colleagues a tragic story of one young woman's fight with mental illness and her family's struggle to find help for their daughter. It is a story of how Congress, in our haste to reform a discriminatory mental health system, has allowed the system to degenerate to the point where those who truly need help are unable to receive it. Ruth Seegrist, the mother of one young victim of our present mental system points out that "just as it was cruel and unjust to indiscriminately lock up the mentally ill years ago, as it is unjust and socially irresponsible to allow the severely ill with established records of violent behavior to fend for themselves. * * *" I hope the retelling of this story will help my colleagues come to a clearer understanding of the disease of mental illness and the need to provide the funds necessary to develop adequate treatment and care. What follows are excerpts from the Philadelphia Daily News and the Delaware County Daily Times that tell the story of Sylvia Seegrist and her battle with mental illness, as seen through the eyes of her mother, Ruth Seegrist. I believe it will convince my colleagues that we must address the issue of reforming our mental health system so that tragedies like this can never happen again.

[From the Philadelphia Daily News, Sept. 1986]

MOM: HELP MIGHT HAVE PREVENTED SYLVIA'S RAMPAGE

(By Ann W. O'Neill)

Ruth Seegrist's voice rose in anger as she described for the legislative task force her sense of helplessness and inability to get psychiatric help for her daughter, Sylvia, in the months before the disturbed young woman killed three people and wounded seven in a shooting rampage at Springfield Mall.

"[Sylvia] phoned the crisis center repeatedly, saying she felt like shooting people. Nothing was done," Seegrist said.

"Sylvia cried out for help over and over as her escalating rage pushed her closer and closer to disaster. No one in responsible power heard her cries. No one," the mother declared, pounding her fist on the table for emphasis.

Ruth Seegrist was the first of about a dozen witnesses to address the blue-ribbon panel, a joint venture of the state Senate and House to review mental health commitment laws and procedures. The third of six planned hearings was held in the Delaware County Courthouse in Media.

The panel was formed shortly after Sylvia Seegrist's shooting spree at the mall last October. Panelists included state Sen. F. Joseph Loeper, of Drexel Hill, and Rep. Mary Ann Arty, of Springfield, and Philadelphia legislators Hardy Williams and Babette Josephs.

Ruth Seegrist said she found a bitter irony in the fact that laws that made it difficult for her to commit Sylvia before she hurt anyone provided her with the most costly and thorough treatment she had ever received—after she had killed.

Like most of the witnesses, many of whom had mentally ill family members, Ruth Seegrist urged the panel to reform the commitment laws, giving family members more say and making it easier to get someone committed against their will—before they hurt themselves or others.

She said she resents commitment laws that dictate that mental patients have to show they are dangerous before they can be forced to receive medication and treatment.

"You have not given the severely ill 'civil liberty.' You have merely given them the right to be slaves to their own devastating and debilitating brain disease," Seegrist said.

"Just as it was cruel and unjust to indiscriminately lock up the mentally ill years ago, so it is unjust and socially irresponsible to allow the severely ill with established records of violent behavior to fend for themselves . . . They are permitted to roam the streets untreated until there is a major catastrophe. And then they are held criminally responsible . . . What a travesty of justice!"

In June, Sylvia Seegrist, 25, was found guilty but mentally ill on three counts of first-degree murder and seven counts of attempted murder in connection with the mall spree. According to testimony during her trial, Seegrist, a paranoid schizophrenic, had been hospitalized a dozen times in 10 years.

She had assaulted her mother on several occasions, and stabbed a counselor with a fruit knife in 1981. Her longest commitment, court-ordered in connection with the stabbing incident, lasted six months.

"I am convinced that in recent years she was not even kept in the hospital long enough for doctors to learn just what medications and dosages she needed," Ruth Seegrist said.

The task force plans a public hearing in Philadelphia next month.

[From the Delaware County Daily Times, Sept. 1986]

SEEGRIST OFFERS POINTERS

Media—Here are Ruth Seegrist's suggestions to improve the state's mental health system:

Patients committed involuntarily because of aggravated assaults should have mental health hearings before being discharged.

The hearing officer—taking into account the patient's full record, not just the latest offense—may assign a case manager or "restricted rights."

The case manager would coordinate the patient's housing, therapy and program. With access to all the patient's records, the case manager would act as an "anchor" or liaison through the mental health system.

"Restricted rights" would be issued if the hearing officer feels the person has a potential for violence. The patient could be recommitted involuntarily when psychotic and before he or she is a "clear and immediate danger."

A mandatory six-week hospitalization would follow and police would be alerted to "restricted" patients after their release. They would be empowered to recommend an immediate commitment if an unusual incident occurs.

EARLY INTERVENTION IS LAW

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, last night, an historic event occurred. President Reagan signed into law legislation that will provide early intervention services to handicapped infants and toddlers. I wish to congratulate the President for signing this important measure, and thank my colleagues for recognizing that these infants and toddlers should receive the early intervention services they clearly need, and deserve.

During the past 15 years, our Nation's commitment to providing the handicapped the avenue for full participation within our society has strengthened and expanded. This law has provided us the opportunity to reaffirm that commitment, a chance to continue to expand the Federal role in ensuring an appropriate education for all children with disabilities.

We have now traveled midway through the 1980's—the decade honoring disabled citizens. But more importantly, we have traveled a great distance since the enactment of Public Law 94-142—the core of America's efforts to provide a free and appropriate education for all children with handicaps. This early intervention law will merely further our goals of equal education, of equal opportunity, of allowing handicapped citizens to move from a life of dependency into a life of productivity and self-sufficiency.

Both Congress and the President have recognized that early intervention services make sense—educationally an economically. Both Congress and the President have recognized that the Federal Government has a major role and a fundamental moral responsibility to develop and sustain the full participation of disabled Americans into our society. And both Congress and the President have recognized that this participation is dependent upon an adequate and effective education. If we really expect our handicapped citizens to take full advantage of the many opportunities this Nation offers, if we really expect our disabled citizens to be full contributing members of society, then we must provide them with the tools necessary to do so—namely, a free and appropriate education.

We have accomplished much with this law, yet we still have more work that needs to be done. What should our future goals be with respect to the education of the handicapped? Perhaps we should look no further than the declaration of independence:

That all men are created equal and independent, from that equal creation they derive rights inherent and inalienable among which are the preservation of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

IN TRIBUTE TO THE FRESNO LIBERTY SINGERS ON OCTOBER 28, 1986—THE STATUE OF LIBERTY'S 100TH BIRTHDAY

HON. RICHARD H. LEHMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, 1986 marks the centennial of the Statue of Liberty. Since its dedication on October 28, 1886, the Statue of Liberty has held high the beacon of freedom, hope, and opportunity to welcome millions of immigrants and visitors from foreign lands. From that time she has been one of the proudest symbols of the American ideal of liberty and justice for all.

Americans nationwide joined throughout the centennial year in celebration and commemoration of all that Miss Liberty represents. Across America, individuals and buinesses and organizations lent helping hands to the restoration of the statue while ceremonies and events paid tribute to her. With great pride I wish to recognize a group of young people in Fresno, CA, who have given their time and energy this year to the commemoration of this Nation's most moving and powerful symbol of freedom.

The Fresno Liberty Singers is a group of teenagers from the Central Valley of California which began with the recording of a song entitled "Happy Birthday, Liberty." The sentiment expressed in the lyrics sung by these teenagers captured the hearts of all who heard this recording. Through this song, the Fresno Liberty Singers reminded individuals young and old of the ideals that our Nation stands for:

We came from the north, from the south; we came from the east, we came from the west; just to see the lady that we love the best.
Happy birthday, Liberty.
On, what a sight you are to see; with your torch held high you light up the sky for the whole wide world to see.
You are a lady grand, all throughout the land.
You gave us equality—thank you, thank you.
How we love you, Liberty and thanks to you, we all are free.
Your freedom's light, it shines so bright—thank you, thank you.
Happy birthday, Liberty.
The old and the young will all agree that we love you best, above the rest.
Hey lady, you are number one with me, Liberty.

Throughout the summer of 1986, the singers, ranging in age from 14 to 16, traveled throughout California to spread their musical tribute to Laby Liberty's birthday. Television and radio stations throughout the region broadcasted the tribute and featured the group in interviews. Fresno Mayor Dale Doig met with the teenagers in his chambers and issued a proclamation naming their song "Happy Birthday, Liberty" as Fresno's official contribution to the centennial celebration in New York and proclaimed the first week in July as "Statue of Liberty Week." The group has been invited to perform for organizations, businesses, ceremonies, and others.

I rise to honor the Fresno Liberty Singers. In their dedication, energy, and talent, they have given us a powerful glimpse of what our Nation is all about. We are a nation of opportunity for all people, no matter how young or old. We are a nation where people are free to assemble and free to speak. We are a nation where a group of youngsters can pull together and travel to spread the message of freedom, hope, and liberty for which our Nation stands.

In recognition of the importance of the Statue of Liberty to the American people, the Congress, by House Joint Resolution 407, has designated the 12-month period ending on October 28, 1986, as the "Centennial Year of Liberty in the United States." Pursuant to this joint resolution, President Ronald Reagan proclaimed this year as such and called upon the people of the United States to observe this year with appropriate ceremonies and activites. I am proud that the Fresno Liberty Singers have represented the Fresno area and young people everywhere in carrying out this Presidential charge.

INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT PROVISIONS

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on an important feature of the conference agreement on the Tax Reform Act of 1986 (H.R. 3838) which has recently received congressional approval and is awaiting the President's signature.

The issues here addressed include those arising from expressed concerns that certain provisions in the Tax Reform Act of 1986 may be seized upon as a basis for denial or restriction of investment tax credit allowable on prior years' equipment purchases for acquisitions of equipment placed in service during tax years prior to the effective dates for repeal set forth in the bill.

For those reasons, two of my colleagues on the Ways and Means Committee have joined me in writing to Assistant Secretary Roger Mentz to express our specific concerns in some detail. A copy of our letter follows.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, October 2, 1986.

Re eligibility of property for investment tax credit under existing law and effect of Tax Reform Act of 1986.

Hon. J. ROGER MENTZ,
Assistant Secretary (for tax policy), U.S. Treasury Department, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. MENTZ: The undersigned Members of Congress are writing here to apprise you of their views regarding certain issues that have been called to our attention regarding the effect of the Tax Reform Act of 1986 (H.R. 3838) on eligibility of property for investment tax credit under existing law.

The issues here addressed include those arising from expressed concerns that certain provisions in the Tax Reform bill may be seized upon as a basis for denial or restriction of investment tax credit allowable on prior years' equipment purchases for acquisitions of equipment placed in service during tax years prior to effective dates for repeal set forth in the bill.

Our views on these issues are summarized in the statement accompanying this letter.

We commend the views expresed in our accompanying statement to the Treasury and to the Internal Revenue Service for guidance in formulation of policies, rules, and administrative practices for application of the investment tax credit. We in the Congress will maintain continuing oversight of interpretative and administrative rules and positions on the issues addressed here.

Very truly yours,

BILL ARCHER,
ROBERT T. MATSUI,
JOHN J. DUNCAN,
Members of Congress.

STATEMENT ACCOMPANYING LETTER FROM MEMBERS OF CONGRESS TO U.S. TREASURY DEPARTMENT RE EFFECT OF TAX REFORM ACT OF 1986 ON ELIGIBILITY OF PROPERTY FOR INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT UNDER EXISTING LAW

This statement expresses the views of the subscribing Members of Congress in regard to certain issues and concerns that have been called to our attention regarding the effect of the Tax Reform Act of 1986 (H.R. 3838) on eligibility of property for investment tax credit under existing law.

Concern has been expressed, for example, in regard to those depreciation provisions in the bill as reported by the conferees (new Code sec. 168(g)(4), added by bill sec. 201(a)), which direct that "rules similar to the rules under (existing investment tax credit law Code) section 48(a)(2), including the exceptions contained in subparagraph (B) therof. . ." shall apply in determining whether property is used predominantly outside the United States.[1]

We do not believe that this or other language in the bill in fact authorizes, or was intended to authorize, the Treasury or Internal Revenue Service to prescribe rules that would have the effect of retroactively denying or restricting the investment tax credit or depreciation allowable under existing law in respect to investments in equipment placed in service prior to the effective dates set forth in the bill for application of its new rules.

Our understanding is consistent with the declaration that "The Congress intends that prior law rules interpreting these (predominant foreign use) exceptions will apply" which appeared in explanation of a comparable provision of the ACRS depreciation provisions in the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 (see p. 91 of "General Explanation of the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981, JCS 71-81, prepared by the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation). Thus it is our understanding that any Treasury regulation or IRS rule purporting to diminish or restrict the property now eligible for investment tax credit under existing law would be invalid by reason of being outside the scope of authority delegated by Congress.

Similarly, some of our constituents have expressed concern that the same section 168(g)(4) could be used as a basis for revoking or otherwise narrowing the liberal ruling treatment heretofore accorded aircraft and vessels under section 48(a)(2)(B)(i) and (iii). Again, we do not believe that this or any other provision in the bill authorizes the Treasury to take a step which would be so sharply at variance with its present published ruling positions. Under current law, the IRS has ruled that an aircraft is eligible for the investment tax credit as long as it returns to the United States every fourteen days unless forces beyond the control of the taxpayer prevent it from doing so (Rev. Rul. 73-367, 1973-2 C.B. 8; LTR 8104069). In the case of a vessel, the IRS has ruled that a U.S. flag vessel documented by the U.S. Coast Guard for use in the foreign or domestic commerce of the United States qualifies for the investment tax credit, even though it is used exclusively outside the United States. (Rev. Rul. 69-509, 1969-2 C.B. 3.) Although the bill repeals the investment credit, after the effective dates prescribed, nothing in the bill should be construed as permitting Treasury or Internal Revenue Service to revoke or narrow its prior ruling policy with respect to aircraft or vessels, or indeed any other transportation equipment.

Another problem called to our attention during our work on the bill involves the eligibility of cargo containers for the investment credit under current law. We are advised that certain IRS agents, in selected audits of U.S. owners of cargo containers recently have taken the new and highly restrictive position that the owners of such containers are not eligible for the investment tax credit unless they prove that each individual container touched the United States, and touched with some as yet unspecified degree of frequency during its period of service.

This new position would interpret existing investment tax credit law (in Code section 48(a)(2)(B)(v)), which has been unchanged since 1962, so as to deny all or a large part of the credit claimed for prior years' investments in containers by certain members of our U.S. container equipment industry whose tax returns for prior years happen to remain open for audit and adjustment of their tax. Such a result would be manifestly in conflict with the intent expressed by Congress in Code section 48(a)(2)(B)(v) to insure availability of the investment credit for cargo containers of U.S. persons.

We are advised this would represent a substantial change in IRS audit practice, which for more than 20 years was generally to allow all the credit for cargo containers claimed by taxpayers in our U.S. industry. This change is proposed without any evidence of a change in the pattern of usage of cargo containers that would be relevant for tax purposes.

This new audit position has no judicial sanction and is contrary to the prior general audit position of the Internal Revenue Service. Many U.S. owners of cargo containers lease them to foreign companies. In these circumstances, it is clear that such owners would be hardpressed to gather evidence of the movement of individual containers for many previous years. Indeed, the cost of gathering information as to the world-wide whereabouts of containers of U.S. owners, assuming it were even available, could far exceed the value of the credit.

We believe that Congress should not be presumed to have intended to require U.S. owners of containers to expend funds as a condition of eligibility for the credit that would exceed the value of the investment tax credit or to have intended to authorize the Internal Revenue Service to impose administrative standards that would require U.S. owners to trace the movement of individual containers. Such a position is contrary to common sense principles for establishing the whereabouts and credit eligibility of a mass of fungible assets. Containers are made to be interchangeable and are useless if not.

In voting on the Tax Reform bill, we did not intend to embrace any such novel position or to put our stamp of approval on any efforts by the Treasury or the Internal Revenue Service to adopt interpretations that would impose upon U.S. owners of shipping containers such an onerous burden or proof.

We believe there are two principles that should be applied in response to any proposals for such a radical change in tax audit treatment. First, no interpretation should be presumed to be in accordance with the original or current intent of Congress, and particularly of its tax-writing committees, if it would result in denial of the investment credit for an investment made by a member of our U.S. industry in cargo containers that are leased or otherwise used and move about the world in response to the practical commercial necessities of prevailing conditions of world trade.

Second, there should be no change having such a drastic, adverse impact on the competitive position of our U.S. container industry that would result under the new interpretations recently proposed by some IRS field agents unless—

(1) The contemplated change is first evaluated and approved for its economic and tax policy implications at all appropriate policy making levels of the National Office of the Internal Revenue Service, the Treasury Department, and the tax-writing committees of Congress; and

(2) The change of position is imposed, not retroactively and unevenly on a case-by-case basis, but solely prospectively by rules of general application to all similarly situated taxpayers, promulgated through a proposed change in regulations which would be processed in accordance with the usual procedural safeguards accorded interested members of the public.

We should maintain diligent oversight to insure that the Treasury and the IRS adheres to these principles. Indeed, failure to observe either of these principles would result in disparate treatment of similarly-situated members of our highly competitive U.S. container equipment industry. Tax policy makers have no business unnecessarily introducing such inequalities into treatment of competitors in the market place.

We also wish to point out that the restrictive audit position newly devised by certain IRS field agents with respect to cargo containers is contrary to our understanding of the law and is legally defective on a broader ground than the burden of proof considerations previously mentioned.

From the very inception of the investment tax credit in 1962, Congress has included cargo containers of U.S. persons within the liberalized class of movable transportation and communication equipment that is not subject to the restrictive "predominant foreign use" test generally applicable to other types of tangible property. The exceptions to the predominant foreign use test are set forth in subparagraph (B) of Internal Revenue Code section 48(a)(2). The exception for containers covers "any container of a United States person which is used in the transportation of property to and from the United States" (Code section 48(a)(2)(B)(v)). Other transportation equipment covered by exceptions to the predominant foreign use test include "any aircraft which is registered by the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency and which is operated to and from the United States" (Code section 48(a)(2)(B)(i)) and "any vessels documented under the laws of the United States which are operated in the foreign or domestic commerce of the United States" (Code section 48(a)(2)(B)(iii)).

With respect to aircraft and vessels, the regulations and published rulings set forth with clarity the standards to be applied in allowing the credit for those classes of transportation assets. Indeed, in the case of a vessel, the regulations (as amplified by Rev. Rul. 69-509, 1969-2 C.B. 3) make it very clear that any U.S. flag vessel documented by the U.S. Coast Guard for use in the domestic or foreign commerce of the United States qualifies for the investment credit, even though the vessel is in fact used exclusively outside the United States.

When the Service published the vessel ruling, it clearly manifested its intention to accept, in the case of a U.S. flag vessel, the U.S. Coast Guard's decision to enroll a vessel in the registry of those eligible to engage in the domestic or foreign commerce of the United States as determinative of the vessel's satisfying the investment tax credit requirement that it be operated in the domestic or foreign commerce of the United States. The promulgation of this ruling was necessarily premised upon the Service's acceptance of the proposition that there is no basis in the language of the statute, the legislative history, or the regulations for any requirement that a documented vessel return to the United States at any time during its period of service. Accordingly, the publication of this liberalized ruling occurred only after a considered policy decision by the Service that it would not look behind the Coast Guard's documentation of a U.S. flag vessel and that the Service would not make its own factual determination as to whether such a vessel is, in fact, operated in the foreign or domestic commerce of the United States.

There is no basis in the language of the statute, the legislative history, or the regulations for applying a U.S. contact or frequency of U.S. contact test with respect to containers. In marked contrast, the regulations applicable to aircraft and motor vehicles expressly require that they return to the United States or be operated to and from the United States "with some degree of frequency" (section 1.48-1(g)(2) (i) and (iv). These regulations properly reflect Congress' explicitly stated intention to impose such a test with respect to such property. H. Rep. No. 1447, 87th Cong., 2d Sess. pp. A19-A20 (1962); S. Rep. No. 188, 87th Cong. 2d Sess. p. 156 (1962). There is, however, no proper or authoritative basis for the few revenue agents' reported attempts to apply the same requirement to containers.

Throughout the history of the investment credit, Congress has consistently accorded cargo containers markedly liberal treatment for purposes of qualification. For example, on a number of occasions the Congress, for purposes of assuring qualification of equipment for the investment tax credit, required that recognition be given to the fact that equipment is designed and constructed for use as complementary or integral parts of an ocean-going vessel or "mother ship". Thus, when Congress repealed the investment tax credit in 1969, it acted to preserve to credit for barges (and "machinery and equipment to be installed on such barges and necessary for their planned use") which are "specifically designed and constructed . . . for use with ocean-going vessels which are designed to carry barges," where credit for the vessel continued to the available pursuant to a binding contract or other type of transitional relief rule (Code sec. 49 (e)(9), added by sec. 703 of the Tax Reform Act of 1969 (P.L. 91-172)). Similarly, in providing a partial investment tax credit for certain subsidized vessels constructed out of subsidy funds established under the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, the Congress acted to assure that the credit would be available not only for "a qualified vessel" but also for "barges or containers which are part of the complement of a qualified vessel" (Code sec. 46(g)(1)(B)). At this juncture, when we are repealing the investments credit, there is no legal or policy justification for our taking any action that might be interpreted as Congressional approval of the restrictive positions of a few revenue agents.

Moreover, Congress' refusal to apply any type of U.S. contact, or frequency of U.S. contact standard, with respect to containers strongly demonstrates that there should be no U.S. contact, or frequency of U.S. contact, test imposed upon containers, as proposed by the agents in selected cases. Although worldwide statistics of container movements suggest that it is likely that a container will at some point make contact with the United States during its years of service, a U.S. container owner would be hardpressed to trace the movements of each container, especially while they are on lease to foreign companies which may not be accountable for the whereabouts of containers. It is hardly likely that Congress would have authorized the Internal Revenue Service to impose administrative standards that would render the liberalized container exception generally useless for most U.S. container owners. Indeed, Congress would never have intended to allow the credit for a costly container vessel ship (whose movements are easily traceable) whether or not the vessel ever touched the United States, but to disallow the credit for all of the relatively inexpensive containers used on such a vessel.

This conclusion is entirely in accord with the structure and underlying policy of Code section 48(a)(2)(B). An examination of the statute reveals that for each exception for transportation equipment where there are specific tests imposed by regulations or rulings, the test is formulated in a manner that is designed to further Congress intent that the investment credit will be generally available for such asset. For example, the frequency test imposed for aircraft is one that the owner can satisfy with reasonable diligence. As liberally interpreted by the Internal Revenue Service, the vessel exception can be easily met. Containers are low-unit-cost, high-volume items and the Treasury or the Internal Revenue Service should hardly be permitted to impose a test for containers that a majority of U.S. container owners could not satisfy without expending more money than the value of the intended tax benefit.

The U.S. courts have consistently held that shipping containers are the functional modern equivalent to the hold of a vessel. See e.g., Northwest Marine Terminal Co. v. Caputo, 432 U.S. 249, 270 (1977); Leather's Best, Inc. v. Mormadynx, 451 F. 2d 800, 815 (2d Cir. 1971). There is, accordingly, a close relationship between containers and the vessels. Since neither the vessel nor the container exception is premised upon a standard of U.S. contact or frequency of such contact. We believe that Congress always intended that the container exception be interpreted for containers of U.S. owners in a manner similar to the exception for U.S. flag vessels.

Accordingly, any container of a U.S. person should be treated as satisfying the requirement of Code section 48(a)(2)(B)(v) in any case where it meets the safety and customs standards currently prescribed by the United States Coast Guard respecting use of the container in the domestic or foreign commerce of the United States. A container of a U.S. person should be treated as meeting such standards if it is listed in the Official Intermodal Equipment Register or similar publication.

We commend the views expressed in our statement to the Treasury and to the Internal Revenue Service for guidance in formulation of policies, rules, and administrative practices for application of the investment tax credit. We in the Congress will maintain continuing oversight of interpretative and administrative rules and positions on the issues addressed here.

DUKE'S DR. RALPH SNYDERMAN TO HEAD NIH ARTHRITIS BOARD

HON. TIM VALENTINE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, October 1 was a landmark day for the National Institutes of Health. It marks the beginning of a yearlong celebration of the first centennial of NIH, one of the world' largest biomedical research institutions. October 1 also marked the first fiscal year of the new National Institute of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal and Skin Diseases [NIAMS].

I am pleased to report that the Advisory Board for the new Institute has elected as its chairman Dr. Ralph Snyderman, professor of medicine and chief of the Division of Rheumatology and Immunology at the Duke University Medical Center in Durham, NC.

Dr. Snyderman is known nationally for his research in inflammatory response. He received his medical degree from the State University of New York Downstate Medical Center and took his internship and residency training at the Duke University Medical Center, where he is now a member of the faculty.

I know I speak for all the citizens of the Second District of North Carolina in expressing my pride in Dr. Snyderman's achievements and leadership. Through his personal efforts, many Americans will have the opportunity for fuller, richer, healthier lives.

For the information of my colleagues, I am including Dr. Snyderman's testimony on behalf of the National Arthritis Advisory Board earlier this year. At the time of his presentation, Dr. Snyderman was Chairman of the Board's Research Committee.

STATEMENT OF RALPH SNYDERMAN, M.D., MEMBER, NATIONAL ARTHRITIS ADVISORY BOARD, BEFORE THE SENATE SUBCOMMITTEE ON LABOR, HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, EDUCATION, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS, APRIL 29, 1986

I am Ralph Snyderman, Chief of the Division of Rheumatology and Immunology, Department of Medicine at Duke University Medical Center and Chairman of the Research Committee, National Arthritis Advisory Board. I appreciate the opportunity to appear before you to present the recommendations of the National Arthritis Advisory Board.

Disorders of the joint and connective tissues afflict more than 35 million Americans. More than 120 different disorders of the joints and connective tissues are categorized under the broad term "arthritis," a group of chronic diseases that is the Nation's leading crippler. Although the prevalence of arthritis is higher among older persons, an estimated 250,000 children have chronic juvenile arthritis, which, in addition to causing pain and swelling of the joints, can retard growth and lead to early blindness, kidney disease, or death. Arthritis in children is, in fact, more prevalent than was paralytic poliomyelitis during the most severe epidemics of the past. Most forms of arthritis are chronic, and many patients unfortunately require lifelong medical care. The cost each year of hospital care, professional services and drugs for arthritis and the loss of productivity from arthritis is estimated at $18.6 billion.

In 1976, Congress enacted P.L. 94-562, which formally established the National Arthritis Advisory Board. The Board's purpose is to monitor the implementation of the Arthritis Plan, to recommend any changes in the Plan, and to propose to Congress and the Administration appropriate guidelines, policies, and procedures for Federal programs relating to arthritis. My testimony is based upon the Board's findings and recommendations.

Advances in fundamental science are contributing to an improved knowledge of the disease processes and mechanisms of arthritis. A great deal of progress has been made in understanding these chronic, crippling disorders. Some of these diseases now can be partially controlled with medication and other types of therapy.

The research effort in arthritis encompasses three general areas: projects associated with immune disregulation, autoimmune diseases, rheumatoid factor, antigen-antibody reactions, and immune complex formation; research concerned with the structure and function of connective tissues such as collagen, basement membranes, synovial tissues, and articular cartilage damaged in the rheumatic diseases; and research projects in specific rheumatic diseases (rheumatoid arthritis, degenerative joint diseases, juvenile arthritis, systemic lupus erythematosus, gout, osteoporosis, and heritable disorders). A fourth related area of basic and clinical research involves the study of the musculoskeletal system in normal and diseased conditions.

Specific agents recently have been found that may initiate or trigger rheumatoid arthritis; these include infectious agents such as parvovirus and Epstein-Barr virus. Moreover, only certain persons who are susceptible to rheumatoid arthritis by their genetically determined immune responsiveness appear to develop the chronic and active inflammation of rheumatoid arthritis. Research on newly developed animal models of arthritis is enhancing the scientific knowledge of these diseases.

Osteoarthritis, the most common form of arthritis, affects 16 million people in the United States. One of the most disabling and crippling diseases in older populations, it has been a difficult disease to study. Two recent research developments point to possible advances in our knowledge of osteoarthritis. In the first, biochemical observations indicate that cartilage cells produce the substances that both build and destroy the cartilage; this may lead to an understanding of why damaged cartilage is unable to repair itself and may help in discovering new ways to induce this repair. In the second development, several new experimental models of osteoarthritis offer the hope for greater knowledge of the cause of and new treatments for this disabling disorder.

Remarkable advances in reconstructive surgery for osteoarthritis and rheumatoid arthritis have been made during the past decade. Improvements have been achieved in total joint replacements for severely damaged hips, knees, shoulders, elbows, and wrists. These results have been achieved through the combined research efforts of bioengineers, rheumatologists, materials scientists, and orthopedic surgeons. Loosening of the joint implant after several years remains a problem. Nonetheless, the future holds promise for the development of implants that will provide normal joint function over an indefinite period.

Systemic lupus erythematosus (SLES) is a serious inflammatory connective tissue disorder that involves main organ systems. Research on SLE, a condition that primarily affects young women, continues to be active and productive. More is being discovered about abnormal immunoregulation in SLE; for example, a newly identified defect in complement receptors on cells in lupus patients may be inherited. Dietary manipulation can alter SLE in experimental models in inbred mice; nonsaturated fatty acids may inhibit the disease-producing immune reactions in these SLE mice. Hormonal regulation also has been shown to be important in SLE and may explain the predominance of SLE in women.

The research potential is considerable for scleroderma, a serious connective tissue disease, and for the spondylitic (spinal arthritis) group of rheumatic diseases, such as ankylosing spondylitis (AS), Reiter's syndrome, psoriatic arthritis, and the gout-associated arthropathies. The Board believes that research in all arthritis-related diseases is at a critical point for major breakthroughs. New leads are emerging in many areas of investigation. Moreover, the availability of new biomedical research technologies such as monoclonal antibodies, recombinant DNA, molecular genetics, and computers is accelerating the pace of major scientific discoveries, yet needs to be exploited more fully.

The National Arthritis Advisory Board is encouraged by the accomplishments of research into the causes and mechanisms of arthritis and the development of new devices, surgical techniques, and drugs that are used to treat arthritis patients. These accomplishments result largely from the impetus generated by the Arthritis Plan that was developed by the National Commission of Arthritis and Related Musculoskeletal Diseases in 1976. The plan identified the major needs and opportunties in arthritis research and treatment and led to a modest increase in Federal appropriations for arthritis-related projects. However, the base of support for scientific investigation has been reduced in recent years because appropriations have not kept pace with the increased cost of biomedical research. Therefore, the research advances we have seen in the past decade are not likely to be duplicated in the future unless additional resources are provided. This reduction in the research base is a major concern to the Board, especially in light of the new and promising opportunities for progress in the prevention, early diagnosis, and treatment of arthritis.

Congress and the administration share the Board's concern about the impact of arthritis on the Nation. In 1985, the Secretary of Health and Human Services identified arthritis research as a departmental priority initiative and Congress authorized the establishment of a separate National Institute of Arthritis, and Musculoskeletal and Skin Disease (NIAMS) in P.L. 99-158. These actions have laid the foundation for the growth of arthritis-related research programs. However, additional funds must be appropriated before the promise of 1985 can become a reality in 1986 and in the future.

To continue this important program, the appropriation for NIAMS must be increased in fiscal year 1987 and subsequent years. The Board has carefully considered the resources required for the above programs and recommends a total budget of $178.4 million, including $3.5 million for administration, for fiscal year 1987. This recommendation includes funds for the following:

INDIVIDUAL RESEARCH GRANTS

The percentage of approved grants for arthritis and related research projects that can be funded has declined steadily from about 45 percent a few years ago to approximately 25 percent in fiscal year 1985. In fiscal year 1986, this rate will drop even farther under current budget allocations. The Board's recommendations would restore the award rate to approximately 45 percent of approved grants.

SPECIALIZED CENTERS OF RESEARCH (SCORS)

One of the most important initiatives of the Board this year is to obtain from Congress support to establish SCORs in the field of arthritis and related diseases. This special research mechanism has been extremely effective in disease areas supported by the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute. The Board is convinced that the establishment of Specialized Centers of Research will provide an extraordinarily effective means of concentrating research personnel and resources on three initial areas of priority and opportunity: rheumatoid arthritis, osteoarthritis, and osteoporosis. SCORs are multidisciplinary, having both basic science and clinical research emphasis, ensuring that advances in basic science are rapidly translated into clinical application, and that clinical needs provide the direction for the basic science. The major recent advances in biomedical technology, as exemplified by the field of molecular biology, need to be rapidly applied to research dealing with arthritis-related diseases. SCOR programs provide an important addition to investigator-initiated research projects, and will spur rapid application of new biotechnological techniques to arthritis research.

In its report on the fiscal year 1986 budget for the Department of Health and Human Services, the Committee on Appropriations stated that SCORs "are useful mechanisms for accelerating research in areas where coordinated, multidisciplinary efforts are likely to produce rapid clinical applications of basic science advances." The Committee requested the National Institute of Arthritis, Diabetes, and Digestive and Kidney Diseases to prepare an assessment of the scientific feasibility and potential benefit of establishing SCORs in arthritis and related diseases. The resulting assessment clearly indicates that the SCOR mechanism would be a valuable adjunct to existing research programs in this area. The Board's recommendations include funds to establish 9 SCORs in 1987, three each in the areas of rheumatoid arthritis, osteoarthritis, and osteoporosis.

ARTHRITIS RESEARCH MANPOWER

The Board also is concerned about the lack of adequate funds for the development of future research scientists. Three different types of individual career development awards are used to support arthritis and related research. The Clinical Investigator Award and the Physician Scientist Award are key to providing adequate opportunity for M.D.'s to acquire sufficient research training and experience in modern methods of biomedical technology to become qualified as independent investigators. The Research Career Development Award enables young established investigators, either M.D.'s or Ph.D.'s, to devote themselves entirely to research during a crucial state of career development. The budget for all these three awards has become so restricted that we anticipate a very severe decline in capacity to support current and future candidates. Funds for institutional training grants also have been severely restricted in recent years, leading to a steady decline in the number of young investigators selecting a research career. The Board's budget recommendations include additional funds to support these vital programs. The national investment in biomedical research manpower needs to be maintained and fully supported.

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF ARTHRITIS, MUSCULOSKELETAL, AND SKIN DISEASES

The creation of this new institute, authorized by P.L. 99-158, will require additional personnel positions and associated funds for essential administrative and scientific functions. The need for these resources was well documented by the sponsors of the enabling legislation. Neither the funds nor the positions have been provided. The Board recommends that 36 additional positions be provided and $3.5 million be appropriated for this purpose.

The Board appreciates your support for arthritis research and the opportunity to appear before this Subcommittee.

TRIBUTE TO GENE LAWHUN

HON. ARLAN STANGELAND

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Speaker, the impending departure of Gene Lawhun from the Office of the Chief of Engineers here in Washington for new duties as Chief of Planning for the corps' Lower Mississippi Valley Division is good news for him and not so good news for those of us in Congress who have come to depend on his readily available expertise.

As Assistant Chief of the Planning Division in the corps' Directorate of Civil Works, Gene has been an invaluable asset to both the corps and to those of us in Congress who are closely involved with corps activities. We on the Public Works and Transportation Committee have especially found Gene to be a fountain of information, always totally prepared and always willing to be of assistance.

For public consumption, he goes by the name of "Gene" or "D.E.", but now that he is leaving "Redskin country", he may as well admit to Dallas Eugene Lawhun. That would be the same Dallas Eugene Lawhun who hails from Huntington, WV, and who graduated from Marshall University in the same Mountaineer State.

He and his lovely wife, Peg, are the proud parents of Richard and Deborah, although it is well known that his 6½-year-old grandson, Josh, believes that the title "best buddy" is his.

Gene truly embellishes the title "engineer." He is, in fact, a registered professional engineer, and he is recognized as a skilled craftsman with few equals, having built a home.

Over the years, Gene has been an active participant and a major contributor in the long battle to get a major water projects construction bill enacted into law. He has been a familiar and welcomed face to those of use who have worked on the front lines in drafting omnibus water resources legislation.

In fact, Gene was well known both cn the Hill and over at the corps for starting just about every speech with a reminder of just how many years it had been since the last omnibus bill.

We all know how he loves to quote statistics, but he may have to drop that one particular number from his repertoire if Congress finally does pass H.R. 6, as it seems poised to do, and if the President signs it into law.

The corps had a farewell luncheon for Gene today. There was a large turnout, as one might have expected given the stature and high esteem enjoyed by the honoree. I know that many of my colleagues were as disappointed as I that a busy House schedule kept us from attending the luncheon.

I understand, however, that it was disclosed at the luncheon that since it is unclear whether the Washington office or the Lower Mississippi Valley Division, with all its political power, actually runs the corps, some of the generals up here aren't sure if they will be calling Gene down in Vicksburg and telling him what to do, or if he will be calling them with directions.

In any event, I know that the valley is getting one of the very best public servants possible, and I wish Gene and his wonderful family the very best in his new assignment.

I do want to share with my colleagues a letter written to Gene and signed by the leadership of the Public Works and Transportation Committee and our Water Resources Subcommittee.

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS AND TRANSPORTATION,
Washington, DC, October 8, 1986.

Mr. D.E. LAWHUN,
Assistant Chief, Planning Division, Directorate of Civil Works, Office of the Chief of Engineers, Washington, DC.

DEAR GENE: We would like to congratulate you on your new assignment as chief of Planning for the Lower Mississippi Valley Division of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

While we are certainly going to miss you in Washington, we are pleased to know that LMVD is gaining a top notch employee. In our judgment, the strength of the Corps of Engineers, in fact the one asset that makes it the best agency in the Federal Government, is the quality of its personnel. Your service in Washington has been exemplary and, without question, you have had a major impact on the many accomplishments of the Corps of Engineers. We are especially appreciative of the unselfish assistance you gave the Members and staff of this Committee.

We wish you and your lovely wife Peg success in your new endeavors and expect to see you in Washington from time to time.

Best wishes.

Sincerely,

GENE SNYDER,
Ranking Minority Member.
JAMES J. HOWARD,
Chairman.
ARLAN STANGELAND,
Ranking Minority Member, Subcommittee on Water Resources.

I know, also, that my colleagues will enjoy the following little jingle, appropriately titled "Down in the Valley or Gene's Lament", composed for Gene and dedicated to him at today's luncheon.

DOWN IN THE VALLEY OR GENE'S LAMENT

(Lyrics by Rangos and Smith)

To the tune of 'Down in the Valley"

Down in the Valley, valley so low,
Congressmen call you, Oh don't you know!
Down in the office or out on your lawn,
Hear the phone ring, Gene, It's old Uncle John.
It's old Uncle John, Gene, chewing your can.
What he won't buy, Gene, is non-structural plans.
Here the phone ring, Gene, it's ringing again.
It's Senator Cochran and Jamie Whitten.
Hear Jamie blow, Gene, hear Jamie blow.
The waters are rising from damnyankee snow.
He wants a new levee to keep people dry.
Where's the report, Gene, now don't tell a lie.
The phone is too loud, Gene, it's bothering the dogs.
This time it's a woman, it's sweet Lindy Boggs.
She will be calm, Gene, and she won't rail,

If on your staff, Gene, you've lots of females.
Simon and Bumpers, Prior and Long,
Senators call you all the day long.
How's the B/C, Gene: is it in the pink?
And if it's not, Gene, they'll drive you to drink.

Down in the valley, there's questions galore
From Bennett Johnston and Albert Gore.
If, you get stuck, Gene, and haven't a clue,
Don't call on us, Gene, we will call on you.

TRIBUTE TO RAYMOND E. BALDWIN

HON. BARBARA B. KENNELLY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I have the sad duty to report to this body the passing of one of the most distinguished public servants in the history of the State of Connecticut—Raymond E. Baldwin.

Ray Baldwin was the Governor of our State, a U.S. Senator, and chief justice of the State supreme court. His public service to the people of the State, and the respect with which they in turn held him, was without bounds.

I believe the remarks of President Colin Campbell of Wesleyan University best show the affection we felt for Ray Baldwin and I submit them for the RECORD at this point.

REMARKS BY PRESIDENT COLIN G. CAMPBELL AT THE FUNERAL OF RAYMOND E. BALDWIN, OCTOBER 8, 1986

I am deeply honored to welcome you this afternoon on behalf of the family of Raymond E. Baldwin. As they have for so many years, Lucian, Raymond, Jr. and Tyler, their wives, children and grandchildren, are today generously sharing an intensely personal moment; sharing with all of us who so loved and respected this extraordinary man. They have been witness to that love and respect which marked Ray Baldwin's legendary career. And they have been much moved by the outpouring of affectionate tributes since his death this past weekend. This is a grateful family. Grateful for your caring, for your expressions of sympathy, and grateful beyond measure, as we all are, for the life we join here today to celebrate.

Raymond E. Baldwin was quite simply one of the most distinguished public servants and one of the finest human beings I have been privileged to know. He was rich in titles and accomplishments but richer still in humane qualities. He only attained all of the highest offices his beloved state of Connecticut can offer—Governor, United States Senator, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court—he carried out each of his many and varied assignments with matchless skill, and even more than skill, devotion. He enriched the life of his time. And what a time that was.

Think of the extraordinary transformation of American society in the 70 years since Ray Baldwin graduated from Wesleyan. Change that was so rapid and so profound over the course of those explosive years that it defies easy comprehension. Yet he was undaunted by that change even when it seemed to threaten his country and his beliefs. Fear was never part of his makeup. He intuitively comprehended the baffling ambiguities and fierce contradictions of a perilious age. A bedrock Yankee conservative—in the noblest sense of that oft-misunderstood term—he was like his hero Abraham Lincoln in holding fast to old virtues and settled practices while staying ever ready to "think anew and act anew" as public needs arose.

Throughout a long political and judicial career, Ray Baldwin always managed to remind us what our country stands for. Both in Hartford and in Washington, he fought injustice and inequality courageously and with an innovative spirit. Never blind to American shortcomings, he called on our native capacity for goodness and indeed greatness. The words "liberty and justice for all" never had the stale ring of stump rhetoric when he uttered them. They were to him bred-in-the-bone truths, as real as sunlight. As a guardian of the public trust for most of his adult life, he sought to make liberty and justice realities for everyone.

A ninth generation American with roots deep in our colonial past, Ray Baldwin drew strength from the Declaration of Independence. He spoke of it as a living document. He seemed to know the Constitution as the framers did, intimately and with deep faith in its permanence despite the pressure of changing circumstance. His belief that the Constitution meant what it said fueled his early and lasting fight for civil rights.

Ray Baldwin was a man of the law and like James Madison, another of his heroes, he believed its "benign magistracy" superior to "the awful coercion of the sword." He viewed the law as civilization's indispensable tool for coping wisely and fairly with the disorder of human experience. That is why he worked as a judicial referee until he was ninety years of age, two decades after he had retired from the bench. That way he could continue to grapple with the complexities and confusions of everyday life, always mindful of the ideal, of what ought to be. This was a source of his strength. He was as comfortable in the bustle of the town as in the cloister of his chambers. Though he never confused Main Street with the heavenly city, he always remembered his obligations to both.

Ray traveled at ease in the company of the mighty, but he was always at heart a local boy, at home with local people. He went to Middletown schools, sang as a choirboy in this fine old church, went to college up on the hill, lived here in town until just a few months ago. What made him so successful a politician was his common touch. He seemed to know everyone, and delighted in talk. To those with whom he worked, he was quick to express appreciation.

His early and lifelong love affair with the Connecticut River, which he explored by canoe as a youth, and in his "stink pot", as he lovingly caller her, in later years, gave him endless pleasure. It is no accident that conservation was one of his highest priorities. If we owned him nothing else, we would be forever indebted for Connecticut's fine public forests and parks which he did so much to establish as governor.

In each of our three branches of government, Ray had the uncanny ability to take great hopes, transform them into reasonable expectations and produce admirable and just results.

It was my good fortune to see Ray Baldwin in still another capacity, that of alumnus and trustee of his alma mater. Many here today can recall his beaming face and booming voice when he—well into his 70s and 80s—led fellow alumni in signing Wesleyan songs at campus gatherings. He was eaually involved in the work of the University. As a trustee, he displayed characteristic loyalty, courage, decency and unfailing good humor. In hectic situations, he could be counted on to recall a humorous anecdote that made you laugh while at the same time it shed light on the problem at hand. Discordant urgencies of the moment shrank to their proper size when seen against the larger duty imposed by our obligations to the future.

Duty, for Ray, was never a narrow confining necessity; it was always a joyous call to the best that was in him and, by example, in his colleagues.

How could one man do so much in one lifetime and mean so much to so many people? I have mentioned one source of his strength, his grounding in the history, particularly the legal history, of our country. The other source was his family. For whatever his professional obligations, his life revolved around Edith and their sons and in time their sons' families. So inextricably entwined were their lives that when Edith died Ray was bereft, and for a time confessed to being lost. The pain never left him, but he found solace as he had throughout his life in the company of his loved ones and loyal friends, and in the supportiveness of this parish he had served so faithfully. In his work for the court and numerous organizations and institutions, he continued to find the satisfaction that he derived from serving the public good so tirelessly.

There is never any excess of good men and women. When one of them is lost we grieve, knowing that on such as these civilization depends. So today we mourn Raymond E. Baldwin's death. Though we gather in sorrow, our sadness is tempered by the realization of a long and useful life lived generously and well. How much richer our own lives have been for his having lived among us. We bid him farewell with love for his memory and with pride in what he meant to each of us, to our state, and to our country.

GILMAN SEEKS CREATION OF NATIONAL BACK INJURY COMMISSION

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to introduce a bill, H.R. 5681 to establish a National Back Injury Commission, which would conduct an extensive study of the nexus between package weight and chronic back injury, disablement, and impairment. Each year in the United States, approximately $15 billion is spent diagnosing and treating back injuries, with a significant loss of worker productivity and a concomitant burden on worker's compensation and private insurance industries.

Currently, the U.S. Postal Service is the only commercial industry which places a limit on the amount of weight which can be lifted at work. There is compelling evidence in ergonomic studies which indicates that a significant number of back injuries could be avoided if jobs were more effectively designed from a safety standpoint. Perhaps a more cost effective and simple remedy would be to place an appropriate weight limitation on all packages, so that the general population would be able to handle them without injury.

Virtually none of the hundreds of studies conducted to date have attempted to isolate the variable of weight when researching the causation of back injury. Back injuries are of such frequency and severity, that a number of businesses are suffering from a pronounced reduction in worker efficiency and their continuity in employment.

In addition, such back injuries comprise approximately one quarter of all indemnity claims, and one third of all worker's compensation claims. Just these statistics alone should speak to the relevance of this issue. There does exist strong evidence that having to lift heavy packages or objects is overwhelmingly responsible for back injuries.

Therefore, it becomes manifest that back injuries be fully studied and analyzed, utilizing weight as a focal point, and attempting to keep all others as constant as possible. The long range benefits of placing a weight limit on all packages, whether used for occupational or nonoccupational use, would be highly significant from an economic, medical and social analysis. Additionally, this bill provides Congress with a legislative guidepost for addressing this serious national concern in the future.

The bill creates a 29 member commission, composed of a wide cross section of the business, medical and legal communities, and places a 1 year limitation on the study. Their final report would form the basis for further legislative action designed to prevent back injuries, and their concomitant burden on our health care and insurance industries.

Mr. Speaker, in urging my colleagues to support this bill, which addresses this serious problem that plagues the health of our Nation, I submit the full text of this bill to be inserted at this point in the RECORD for their consideration and review.

A bill to establish a commission on back injuries

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Back Injury Commission Act of 1986".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds the following:

(1) The number and severity of occupational back injuries, the expenditures made to treat such injuries, and the resulting impaired efficiency of our work force and general public, are significant national problems.

(2) Such injuries adversely affect not only persons affiliated with such injuries, but also businesses, hospitals and other health care providers, and nonprofit organizations dealing with such injuries.

(3) Such injuries comprise approximately 1/4 of all indemnity claims and 1/3 of all claims for worker's compenation benefits.

(4) Such injuries are of such frequency and severity that businesses are suffering from a pronounced reduction in worker efficiency and continuity in employment.

(5) Preventing such injuries can be more cost effective than paying indemnity claims and worker's compensation benefits.

SEC. 3. ESTABLISHMENT.

There is hereby established a commission to be known as the Commission on Back Injuries (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Commission").

SEC. 4. DUTIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Commission shall study the causes and consequences of occupational back injuries and recommend actions to prevent and alleviate such injuries. Such recommendations shall include actions that should be undertaken by the Federal Government, the governments of the several States, and the political subdivisions of the States, and the business community of the United States.

(b) INVESTIGATION.—As part of the study under subsection (a), the Commission shall investigate—

(1) general causes of occupational back injuries and in particular the extent to which—

(A) the weight of packages commonly lifted by workers,

(B) the instability of such packages,

(C) the height to which workers lift such packages,

(D) differences in the physical capacity of workers to lift such packages, and

(E) the repetitive lifting of such packages by workers, contribute to such injuries,

(2) the effect that lifting packages weighing more than 50 pounds has on the musculoskeletal system,

(3) the feasibility of requiring that articles be packaged so that the relationship of the weight to the bulk of such package is within the limits of an average worker to lift without causing such injuries,

(4) the effect that claims for such injuries have on the worker's compensation system,

(5) the effect that claims for such injuries have on the private insurance industry,

(6) the effect that treating such injuries have on hospital utilization of available bed space.

(c) CONSULTATION.—As part of the study under subsection (a), the Commission shall consult with individuals who are afflicted by occupational back injuries and with individuals indirectly affected by such injuries, including—

(1) officials of State governments and governments of political subdivisions of States, including school districts and other special purpose districts,

(2) representatives of businesses that are subject to worker's compensation laws,

(3) individuals who purchase personal injury insurance and representatives of organizations that represent such individuals,

(4) representatives of labor organizations,

(5) individuals knowledgeable with respect to health insurance and worker's compensation laws, including attorneys who represent plaintiffs and defendants in tort litigation and worker's compensation cases,

(6) individuals knowledgeable with respect to the insurance industry, including the cyclical nature and the investment practices of such industry,

(7) individuals knowledgeable with respect to engineering, biomechanics, and epidemiology,

(8) individuals knowledgeable with respect to the long-term economic effects of occupational back injuries in countries other than the United States, and

(9) individuals knowledgeable with respect to public health who are concerned with preventing such injuries.

SEC. 5. MEMBERSHIP.

(a) NUMBER AND APPOINTMENT.—The Commission shall be composed of 29 members appointed by the President as follows:

(1) Two individuals who are knowledgeable with respect to—

(A) the business of underwriting insurance that provides compensation for personal injuries, or

(B) the legal representation of business organizations that underwrite such insurance.

(2) Three individuals who are knowledgeable with respect to—

(A) the economic impact on the materials handling industry that would result from requiring that the weight of packages lifted by workers not exceed 50 pounds, whether in component or final manufactured form, and

(B) the economic feasibility of reducing the package weight of all consumer goods that exceed 50 pounds.

(3) Three individuals who are knowledgeable with respect to the negative biomechanical implications of lifting heavy packages and whether reducing package weight can alleviate such implications.

(4) Two individuals knowledgeable with respect to biomechanical engineering.

(5) Three individuals knowledgeable with respect to the medical treatment of occupational back injuries,

(6) Three individuals who are representatives of industries whose workers have been afflicted by occupational back injuries.

(7) Two individuals who have sought worker's compensation benefits for back injuries.

(8) Three individuals knowledgeable with respect to orthopedics.

(9) Two individuals knowledgeable with respect to statistics.

(10) Three individuals engaged in consumer research regarding occupational back injuries and their causes.

(11) Three individuals who are public health officials.

(b) TERMS.—Members shall be appointed for the life of the Commission.

(c) TIME FOR MAKING APPOINTMENTS.—Appointments under subsection (a) shall be made not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(g) VACANCIES.—A vacancy in the Commission shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made.

(h) PAY AND REIMBURSEMENT OF EXPENSES.—A member of the Commission shall serve without pay, but shall be allowed travel expenses, including a per diem allowance, in accordance with section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for each day during which such member is engaged in carrying out the duties of the Commission.

SEC. 6. STAFF AND CONSULTANTS.

(a) STAFF.—The Commission may appoint and fix the pay of such staff as it considers to be appropriate. Such appointments and pay may be made without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title relating to classification and the General Schedule pay rates, except that no individual so appointed may receive pay in excess of the minimum annual rate of basic pay payable for GS-12 of the General Schedule.

(b) CONSULTANTS.—The Commission may procure such temporary and intermittent services of consultants under section 3109(b) of title 5, United States Code, but at rates for individuals not to exceed the daily equivalent of the minimum annual rate of basic pay payable for GS-12 of the General Schedule.

SEC. 7. POWERS OF COMMISSION.

(d) ADMINISTRATIVE SUPPORT SERVICES.—Upon the request of the Commission, the Administrator of General Services shall provide to the Commission on a reimbursable basis any administrative support services the Commission may request.

SEC. 8. REPORT.

The Commission shall transmit a report to the President and to each House of the Congress not later than 1 year after the date of the first meeting of the Commission under section 5(f). The report shall contain the findings, conclusions, and recommendations of the Commission as a result of carrying out the duties of the Commission under section 4.

SEC. 9. TERMINATION.

The Commission shall cease to exist 30 days after submitting the report required in section 8.

SEC. 10. DEFINITION OF WORKER'S COMPENSATION.

In this Act, the term "worker's compensation" means a statutory system established by a State to provide compensation to workers or their dependents in the event of occupational injuries, without legal actions and proof of negligence.

SEC. 11. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This Act shall take effect October 1, 1987.

POLITICAL INFLUENCE EXERTED BY SENIOR CITIZENS

HON. TONY COELHO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, for years, we in politics have watched the rapid increase in the senior citizen population and wondered how soon it would be before these older Americans fully exerted their political influence.

Well, it now appears the day will be upon us far sooner than we had expected. And the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare is in the forefront of the effort to bring that about.

As a result of what must be one of the most sophisticated direct mail efforts ever, not only is the National Committee turning out millions of postcards, petitions, and letters to Congressmen and Senators, but it is also directing senior citizen campaign volunteer workers into House and Senate races all across the Nation.

And, I'm not talking about a handful of volunteers here and another handful or so there. I'm talking about scores and scores and thousands and thousands.

In just one race, a race involving our colleague from New Mexico, more than 300 senior citizens flooded BILL RICHARDSON'S campaign headquarters with volunteer worker cards in just a matter of days.

And that's in a district where the National Committee has fewer than 3,000 members. So imagine what they can do in a district where the membership totals 15,000 or 20,000—and there are a number of districts like that across the country.

But, even if they are successful in getting just half of that number to volunteer in the rest of the races where they've endorsed and asked members to get involved—and they've done that for either a House or Senate candidate in nearly 400 of the 435 districts in the Nation—the National Committee can point proudly to turning out some 65,000 volunteers nationwide.

As much as I wish this effort was being made solely for Members and challengers on this side of the aisle, such is not the case.

The National Committee is a bipartisan organization, supporting both Democrats and Republicans in both House and Senate races this year.

The use of direct mail in politics is a recent and sometimes misused phenomenon. Here is a clear case where direct mail can be—and is being—used to reach into the homes of America's seniors and encourage them to participate in the democratic process.

The National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare is to be congratulated for its efforts and I, for one, look forward to ever increasing participation from this fastest growing segment of our Nation, our senior citizens.

A CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO TRINITY LUTHERAN CHURCH

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the 100th anniversary of Trinity Evangelical Lutheran Church in Bechtelsville, PA. The congregation is commemorating this important occasion with a number of celebrations.

The church was founded as a union church for members of the Lutheran and Reformed denominations and was constructed with the assistance of Mennonites in the area. The cornerstone was laid on Whitsunday 1886 and the church was dedicated on May 7, 1887. The first pastor was the Rev. J.H. Kline who served the congregation for 30 years. The congregation grew steadily for 60 years, so steadily in fact, that the church was forced to split and form a parish in 1946. In 1959, another change occurred, as the parish was dissolved into two separate churches. Since these changes, the church has steadily grown and expanded. Under the current leadership of the Rev. Wayne R. Kaufman, Trinity Lutheran is not only a place of worship but an integral part of the community.

Trinity Lutheran's congregation can certainly be proud of their many accomplishments. For the past 100 years, the church has grown and flourished, providing guidance and support for many generations. I salute the congregation of the Trinity Lutheran Church on their 100th anniversary and wish them continued success and good fortune in the years to come.

VICTIMS OF HOLOCAUST IN THE UKRAINE

HON. BOB EDGAR

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Speaker, despite the fact that this is the busiest time in any Member's term, I would like to take a moment to call attention to a resolution submitted by the American Foundation For Negro Affairs [AFNA] inviting us to join them in the commemoration of the victims of holocaust in the Ukraine in 1932–33. Such acts of extreme cruelty and injustice must be remembered if we are to prevent their recurrence. The AFNA, the Family of Leaders, and the American Foundation for African American Affairs are to be commended for supporting the Ukrainian people in its fight for self-determination. I salute these dedicated individuals who labor against oppression and fight for all our human rights. The following are their resolutions:

THE AMERICAN FOUNDATION FOR NEGRO AFFAIRS—RESOLUTION

VICTIMS OF HOLOCAUST IN UKRAINE

Our knowledge of the Holocaust of 1932–33 has come to us through personal contact with Ukrainian victims, survivors, relatives and friends . . . and from the worldwide communication system . . . From this vantage point, the 1932-33 Holocaust and the suffering of the Ukrainian people have emerged as among the world's greatest evils inflicted by humans on humankind . . .

We therefore pray, "that Africans and African descendants everywhere" join with "Ukrainians" and other concerned people of the world in support of the Ukrainians' total fulfillment of their historic cause . . .

Therefore, the following Resolution is hereby drafted:

Whereas, the Ukrainians have experienced the Holocaust of 1932-33 with a loss of eight million Ukrainians which occurred through murder and forced starvation, and

Whereas, the Ukrainian Philadelphia Chapter Of The American Friends of the Anti-Bolshevik Block Of Nations remembers the horror of the Holocaust of 1932-33 and expresses fervent hope and prayers that this crime against humanity shall never happen again, and

Whereas, while this Resolution is being written, terrorism and death are spreading throughout the world; killing the aged, children, and women in: The Ukraine, Afghanistan, South Africa, South America, Israel, and the Middle East, and

Whereas, the United States of America is now engaged in a life and death struggle to prevent the spread of foreign ideologies and its dictatorial rulers, which now have under their bondage, 49% of the world's population, and

Whereas, we respectfully request the President of the United States to renounce the Yalta and Potsdam Agreements and request the United States Congress to ratify this action, thus reinforcing the position of the United States in its previous statement "that the Republic of the Ukraine be free and independent," and

Whereas, we believe that only when all nations and people under bondage by an Imperialistic empire gain freedom, and the right to self-determination, will peace on earth become a reality.

Now, therefore, The American Foundation for African American Affairs, AFNA National Education And Research Fund, and The Family Of Leaders, representing 180 organizations, do hereby pray, that Africans and African descendants everywhere, join with the Americans of Ukrainian origin, as a memorial to those who suffered as a result of these crimes against humanity, and to assure the continuation of the struggle against the inhumane oppression that continues to date in Ukraine and other parts of the world, and Further, that a copy of the Resolution be presented to The Honorable William Nezowy, President of the Ukrainian Philadelphia Chapter Of The American Friends Of Anti-Bolshevik Block Of Nations, in acknowledging the week of May 18-24 as a week of mourning for the victims of the Holocaust and of the Ukraine, presently now occupied by Russia.

Be it further resolved that a copy of this Resolution be mailed to the President of the Organization Of African Unity (O.A.U.), representing forty-one African governments.

Certified and signed this Fourth day of March, 1986 City and County of Philadelphia, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, United States Of America.

Sincerely,

SAMUEL L. EVANS,
National Chairman, American Foundation for Negro Affairs, AFNA National Education and Research Fund, and Family of Leaders.

BOARD OF JUDGES, COURT OF COMMON PLEAS OF PHILADELPHIA

Whereas, the Board of Judges of the Court of Common Pleas of Philadelphia joins the City of Philadelphia in acknowledging the Week of May 18 as the period of mourning for the victims of the Ukrainian Holocaust of 1932-33;

Whereas, We remember the past injustices perpetrated during this unfortuate period in which the Russian Government refused to allow European aid programs to help the starving Ukrainians;

Whereas, it is our intent to urge world leaders to be ever vigilant to prevent the reoccurrence of these inhumanities to man.

Now, therefore the Judges of the Philadelphia Court of Common Pleas extends to Americans of Ukraine origin, and to all peoples of this earth, our fullest support for justice and fair play; and further, We present this Commemoration to William Nezowy, President of the Ukrainian Philadelphia Chapter of American Friends of the Anti-Bolshevik Bloc of Nations, and acknowledge his untiring efforts on behalf of his organization to bring peace and tranquility to people of all races, origins and ethnic backgrounds.

EDWARD BRADLEY,
Presiding Judge,
Court of Common Pleas.
CALVIN T. WILSON,
Secretary, Board of Judges.

Presented this 21 day of May 1986.

TRIBUTE TO DR. EOIN McKIERNAN

HON. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, JR.

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to pay tribute to a truly extraordinary American, Dr. Eoin McKiernan, the founder of the Irish American Cultural Institute.

Through his passion for the homeland of his mother and grandparents, Dr. McKiernan has brought an awareness of Ireland and its rich literature, theater, art and music to all Americans, but especially to those of us 44 million Americans of Irish ancestry.

Dr. McKiernan was born in New York City in 1915. He learned the Irish language from his mother in his early years, and later became fluent after attending classes run by the Gaelic Society in New York. After completing his studies and a successful business career, he became a professor at the State University of New York and then head of the English department at the College of St. Thomas, St. Paul, MN.

In 1962, Dr. McKiernan founded the Irish American Cultural Institute, which among other cultural activities, sponsors scholarships to allow Irish students to study in America, summer schools to allow American students to study in Ireland, United States lecture tours by Irish academics, and tours of the United States by Irish theater companies. In another effort to bring Irish Americans closer to their homeland, Dr. McKiernan created the "Trees of Ireland" project, which invites Irish Americans to sponsor the planting of a tree in Irish soil to commemorate their ancestors.

Mr. Speaker, I join thousands of other Americans of Irish descent and countless world leaders in praising the works of Dr. McKiernan. The text of an article on Dr. McKiernan appearing in Ireland of the Welcomes magazine follows:

EOIN MCKIERNAN

(By Desmond Rushe)

Eoin McKiernan is that most rare of modern humans—a dreamer who is wide awake; an idealist who is totally practical. He is also a great rarity among Irish-Americans, for though he is a native New Yorker (born Manhattan, 1915), he is a fluent speaker of the Irish language and is more versed in Irish literature, history, arts and inherited culture than the vast majority of Irishmen. He is a remarkable mixture.

How did he become so? Among early memories he treasures are those of his mother (Delia Nagle, an emigrant from near Lahinch, Co. Clare), telling old Irish folk tales, singing snatches of songs in Irish and introducing the odd piece of her native tongue into family prayers. His father was a second generation Irish-American with roots in Co. Leitrim.

It was his mother's influence that caused him to attend Irish language classes run by Gaelic Society in New York and, when he was subsequently awarded a scholarship, led him to the Gaeltacht village of Rosmuc in Connemara, where he achieved fluency. And though he was to become, in turn, an executive in Macys department store, a farm manager, professor of English at the State University of New York and head of the English department at the College of St. Thomas, St. Paul, Minn., the Irish cultural heritage remained his consuming passion.

It grieved him to see it being neglected, forgotten, ignored or trivialised by the Irish-American community. I also grieved him that to the general public in America. Ireland came into prominence only once a year in a solurge of St. Parrick's Day Paddywhackery.

To Eoin McKiernan, Ireland and its people were something else. They meant at glowingly rich inherited culture and a virbrant contemporary scene in literature, theatre, music, painting and sculpture. He set about generating an awareness of what the country and its people are all about in terms of the ancient and the modern, particularly among the 44 million Americans who claimed Irish ancestry in the last U.S. census.

The record of his activities and achievements over the past 25 years is, by any standards astonishing. To him is due the setting up of the Irish American Cultural Institute; the publication of Eire-Ireland, a quarterly journal of Irish studies; awards for Irish artists, writers and musicians; scholarships to allow Irish students study in America and summer schools to allow American students study in Ireland; annual visits to the U.S. of Irish lecturers; periodic tours by Irish theatre companies; a 53-episode TV series on aspects of Ireland screened throughout the U.S., and much more.

In 1972, Princess Grace of Monaco told him how highly she admired his work, and became International Chairman of the Institute. In 1969, the National University of Ireland conferred on him an honorary D.Litt. degree and in 1976, the Ancient Order of Hibermians awarded him the John F. Kennedy Medal.

Meanwhile Eoin McKiernan was shuttling between America and Ireland, guiding cultural package tours; meeting Presidents, Prime Ministers and cabinet Ministers; overcoming scepticism; facing pig-headed bureaucracy with terrier tenacity, always promoting his dream. Part of his dream which has taken many years to come to fruition is his Trees for Ireland project. In the realm of practical idealism, it could well become his greatest single triumph.

The concept is vastly appealing. Irish-Americans would be invited to sponsor trees at ten dollars each in commemoration of their forebears or as gifts to others. They would receive certificates indicating the chosen place of planting. Their names would be entered in registers maintained at the nominated forest centres. They would symbolically and literally, be sinking roots in Irish soil. They would be giving themselves a point of ethnic identification and, in the process, they would be enriching their ancestral land environmentally and economically.

Trees for Ireland blends with peculiar appropriateness Eoin McKiernan's vision and practicality, and a memorial (an inscribed Connemara marble slab on a granite plinth) to mark the first planting was unveiled by the Taoiseach Dr. Garret FitzGerald in September. It is located at Cappaghoosh, Co. Galway in the Maam State Forest. There, 25,000 sitka spruce (of North American origin) have now taken root: they occupy a 15-acre area on the side of a hill which rises gently from one of the small lakes that enhance Connemara's poignant beauty. Other and bigger plantings in other and beautiful parts of the country will follow.

It was the wise of Horace that his poetry would be, for him, 'a monument more lasting than bronze'. That thought is quoted in each issue of 'Eire-Ireland' magazine because Eoin McKiernan, who took a degree in classical languages in addition to one in English literature, agrees with it. Works of the spirit of man make the most lasting of monuments. A sponsored tree can be such a monument in metaphoric terms. His monuments is in his work for Irish culture, and it will outlast any metal.

SUFFERING IN ETHIOPIA

HON. TOBY ROTH

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, in hearings just 2 weeks ago before the House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on International Economic Policy and Trade, administration officials testified that they fear the Marxist Ethiopian regime will resume their controversial resettlement program within a matter of weeks. The same resettlement program, interrupted earlier this year, is said to have claimed the lives of over 100,000 Ethiopian men, women, and children.

This month's cover story of Reader's Digest details the horrors uncovered in Ethiopia by Dr. Rony Brauman, a French physician who directs Doctors Without Borders. It is a story that again exposes the horrible truth about the suffering continuing today in Ethiopia.

For the benefit of my colleagues, I am submitting both the Reader's Digest report and a Washington Times summary of our hearing on this troubling situation.

[From the Reader's Digest, Oct. 1986]

FAMINE AID: WERE WE DUPED?

(By Dr. Rony Brauman)

On a hot afternoon in early 1985, I stood on the tarmac of the airport at Addis Ababa, the capital of Ethiopia, and lived a privileged moment. As cargo plane after cargo plane landed, others circled overhead, awaiting their clearance to come in. The Western world's air bridge to Ethiopia was in full swing. In whatever direction I looked, those hulking giants, symbols of the best that is in humanity, were unloading food and grain, tents, blankets, jeeps, even fully equipped hospitals.

Shocked by the terrible images of starvation brought into their homes by television, millions of ordinary citizens throughout Western Europe and North America spontaneously dug into their pockets and gave unreservedly to the charities that asked for their help. The surge of generosity that I witnessed that day only grew greater as the months passed. A host of rock stars in America recorded the spectacular best-seller "We Are the World" (more than 16 million copies sold) and dedicated 90 percent of the proceeds to African famine relief. Irish musician Bob Geldof founded Band Aid and its American counterpart Live Aid, and organized the hugely successful 16-hour, all-star rock marathon held simultaneously in Philadelphia and London, and beamed to the whole world via satellite. More than $100 million was gathered in response to the call for help.

In the months that followed, the euphoria that swept over me that day at the airport gradually gave way to bitter disappointment while we watched the cynical betrayal of the international-aid campaign. Here is the harsh truth: your donations have been massively misappropriated by Lt. Col. Mengistu Haile Mariam's Soviet-dominated regime. Money, food and equipment intended for the starving have been hijacked by the authorities and used as a means of pressure on the anti-government peoples of Ethiopia's northern provinces.

Like bait in a trap, Western-donated food is being used to lure the starving from their villages into deportation centers. From there, the people are herded away at gunpoint to barely disguised labor camps.

In the words of my colleague and predecessor at Doctors Without Borders, Dr. Claude Malhuret, now France's Secretary of State for Human Rights: "Western governments and humanitarian groups unwittingly fueled—and are continuing to fuel—an operation that will be described in hindsight in a few years' time as one of the greatest slaughters of our time."

HIDDEN FAMINE

We at Doctors Without Borders should have known better. We had first applied to enter Ethiopia in 1982 when the country was in one of its cyclical periods of drought. Since our request was ignored, we served clandestinely in the northern provinces of Tigray and Eritrea, treating the sick and starving. In this region of unrest, we had seen the scorched-earth tactics of Mengistu's army in its attempt to suppress the rebel fronts.

The army's drives into enemy territory were a deliberate attempt to ruin that secessionist part of the country and one of the main reasons why the famine reached such dramatic proportions. Villages suspected of supporting the rebels were systematically pillaged, their stocks of grain confiscated or burned, their livestock slaughtered. Dispossessed of reserves, the peasants were helpless when the cycle of drought struck again. This made them prime candidates for "resettlement" in the southwest, where they could no longer help the rebels.

For two years the Mengistu government hid the famine from the world. But after a lavish celebration of the tenth anniversary of the Ethiopian revolution—at a cost of $100 million—the government threw open the doors of the country to the Western press. With the rush of TV crews and newspapermen, alarming stories about the suffering were encouraged. The government now did its best to magnify the famine, flying journalists to carefully chosen locations. It took us months to understand that the aim was to make the West pay for the resettlement scheme and help the war effort in the north.

As Western food and medical aid flooded in, the Soviets sent arms. Grain rotted on docks and in warehouses, because the only trucks available belonged to the army, which did not consider food transport for the starving a priority. Wheat ships were made to wait several days at anchor while Soviet freighters unloaded tanks, ammunition and cement. In November 1984, Ethiopian authorities even brazenly demanded that the United States pay for the rental of government-owned vehicles to distribute the $100 million of emergency aid that it had sent to Addis.

If Americans were naive in their response to the Marxist government's call for help, so, too, were Doctors Without Borders. We had eagerly accepted the Ethiopians' sudden invitation to join the struggle against famine. By late fall of 1984, we had two teams working in the worst areas. In those days before the international rescue effort was in full swing, there was a shortage of food, medication and supplies. In the vast camp of Korem, 385 miles north of Addis in Welo Province, the 100,000 inmates were dying by the hundreds before we could give them the least care.

TERROR RAIDS

When food, tents and blankets first arrived, Dr. Brigitte Vasset, chief of our medical crew at Korem, joyfully ordered all 150 tents to be set up and the blankets distributed: the cold season was already on the land, complicating and worsening the problems of malnutrition. Hardly had her order been given when the camp's Communist Party chief stormed into Dr. Vasset's consulting room to countermand it. "We don't want the camps to be comfortable," he said.

It was a question of life or death, not comfort, but the message was clear. We had assumed that the camps were relief stations where the peasants could regain their strength before returning to their farms after the drought. We were wrong. The government saw them as nothing more than way stations on the road to resettlement, the first step to emptying the north of a large part of its population—over one million people who did not want to leave.

In December Dr. Vasset returned from Addis Ababa to find the camp empty except for babies, the aged and the sick. It was her first experience with a resettlement raid. The army had arrived with its trucks, herded away as many people as the vehicles could carry and driven them off for transport south. Terrorized, the remaining Korem inhabitants who were strong enough fled into the nearby mountains. But stalked by hunger, they soon straggled back, resigned to whatever fate had been decided for them.

Next a quota system was established: so many individuals required from each district; never mind the niceties. Husbands and wives were split up, probably never to see each other again. Hundreds of children were left behind to fend for themselves. The kids who did not die were sent to orphanages to be raised as Mengistu's "new human beings."

Dr. Vasset and her colleagues witnessed three deportation raids at Korem. A total of 17,232 were taken away, almost all of them against their will. By the time of the third raid, the militia moved right into our hospital and convalescence shelters and dragged off those who were too weak to flee. As the militiamen beat them to the trucks with sticks, Dr. Vasset protested that most would not survive the trip. The Party chief shrugged. He had a quota to fill.

We and our brother organizations in the field watched helplessly as the sick, hungry and dying were manipulated and coerced into joining the flood south. Time and again, even when stocks were overflowing, we saw food withheld from the camps while being made abundantly available in nearby resettlement transit centers. The bargain was starkly simple: if you want to eat, come in for deportation.

The same kinds of tactics operated in the countryside far from the camps. Promises of grain distribution brought farmers trudging from miles around to central trapping points where the soldiers were waiting in hiding. A call for free vaccination of cattle served doubly well, because it netted both the farmers and their herds. The farmers joined the lists of resettlers, and the cattle went to the milita. It was after campaigns of this sort that relief workers discovered what otherwise would have been inexplicable: ghost villages with huts, tools and household utensils intact, and crops untended in the fields.

SLAVE LABOR

In June 1985 we installed a treatment center at Sek'ot'a, an important northern city. We found desolation. The Ethiopian army had destroyed all the crops, herds and farms in the vicinity. With no food available, the people would become dependent on the government camps, and the rebels would lose their support. To the world's press who were ushered into Sek'ot'a, these masses of barely living humanity were presented as victims of natural calamity—in fact they were victims of the government.

Even the famous drought proved to be something of a false issue. Our organization dispatched a hydrogeologist to Sek'ot'a and he discovered an enormous deposit of readily accessible underground water. At relatively low cost—only a small fraction of what was being raised for famine aid—there could have been water for everyone. Our representations to the government fall on deaf ears. What was desired was not water but a Sek'ot'a emptied of people.

The longer we stayed, the more the horror stories repeated themselves. By the middle of 1985, grain was rotting on the docks at the port of Aseb because trucks that had been donated for its transport were being used in the relentless pursuit of resettlement. Today, I am certain that at least half the deaths in Ethiopia must be attributed directly or indirectly to its own government.

The majority of the deportees serve the government as slave labor on the coffee plantations, which account for two-thirds of the country's hard currency. The death toll in these resettlement villages is appalling. An estimated 15 to 20 percent of the resettlers died in the first three months after being taken from their homes. For these population shifts alone, not taking into account the deliberate starvation instituted in the north, the Ethiopian government has on its hands the blood of at least 100,000 victims.

The failure of the resettlement program has been total, as demonstrated by Cultural Survival, Inc., a nonprofit group of Harvard anthropologists. Their comprehensive study, based on hundreds of interviews with victims of government-imposed resettlement, presents a shattering image of the Ethiopian tragedy. Not only are the work camps unable to feed the Ethiopian people, but these very collectives are prime candidates for future famines.

Even the collective farms, established several years earlier, are still so notoriously inefficient that they consume 90 percent of the government's agricultural investment, while producing barely five percent of the country's farm output. Yet Mengistu and his fellow theorists plow obdurately forward on their corpse-littered path.

GUIDED TOURS

As the mass deportations continued, the situation in the field camps and nutrition centers continued to be desperate, in spite of the massive arrival in Ethiopia of foodstuffs from the West. The notables who visited the camps, the charity representatives and even the ambassadors of the donating countries were continually duped by their Ethiopian guides. Every time, the scenario was the same: suddenly, as if by magic, the trucks got through and the sacks of grain were plentiful. The notables returned home to write glowing reports about the efficient distribution system, but as soon as they left, the miracles ceased. The desire to believe in the success of the good cause was so powerful that these people fell into a bizarre kind of voluntary blindness.

I was particularly shocked by the U.N.'s resident representative, and assistant secretary-general installed in Addis, who invariably dismissed our protests with a few condescending phrases. Even when I told him point-blank that the resettlement program which the West's aid had made possible was killing more Ethiopians than the famine was, he answered, "I have no reason to believe that these people left the camps against their own free will." One day I should like to understand how the U.N.'s highest representative in Ethiopia could be unable to see the murderous nature of these deportations, thereby lending a blessing to one of the world's bloodiest and most tyrannical governments.

Numerous and prominent were the victims of the same hoodwinking—show-business stars, Western government ministers, ambassadors—all good and concerned human beings. They usually arrived in the Korem camp by government helicopter or car, spent an hour or so on the standard VIP tour, then were whisked away as swiftly as they had arrived. As far as they could see, all was well.

In June 1985 the government allowed us to set up a regional food-distribution center in Kelala, a sprawling farm district in southwest Welo Province. By then the zeal with which the resettlement was pursued was utterly unbelievable.

To survive, the thousands of malnourished little children at Kelala required small amounts of high-energy food six to eight time a day. We had the food, but authorities refused to allow us to carry out the treatment. The system of nourishment we had proposed was unacceptable, a functionary explained, because it would maintain the population at Kelala. By October nearly all the children—3000 of them—were dead. They were as good as murdered.

FINANCE FAMINE

Last December we were ordered out of Ethiopia. Armed militiamen burst into our compounds, seized our equipment and menaced our volunteers. Some of our employees were beaten, and our trucks, medicines and food stores confiscated. We left Ethiopia branded as enemies of the revolution. The regime spoke the truth. The atrocities committed in the name of Mengistu's master plan did make us enemies of the revolution.

Today, Ethiopia remains the only country in the region still demanding huge quantities of food aid—even though the drought has long since ended. It is because the government has destroyed its own agricultural structures. It has prepared future famines. Meanwhile, the mass deportations and the work camps continue, and we in the West are expected to pay for them.

I am convinced that it is morally wrong for us to assist Mengistu and his callous functionaries in carrying out this murderous policy. During the famine, millions in the West responded with unequaled generosity, and no doubt saved many people from starvation. How, however, the main cause of death in the northern provinces is no longer famine but forced resettlement.

It is tragic, but what I am saying it this: we have been duped. The best way to save lives now is for the West to demand an end to the forced resettlements. Unless they cease, further food aid will only grease the gears, of Mengistu's killing machine.

ETHIOPIA SEEN RESUMING RESETTLEMENT

(By Ed Rogers)

Reagan administration officials yesterday expressed fear that the Marxist Ethiopia regime will resume a resettlement program that is believed to have cost 100,000 lives before it was halted last December.

"We see a serious danger that the Ethiopian government, emboldened by the improved food situation, will resume its forced resettlement program and accelereate other efforts at regimentation," said Alan L. Keyes, an assistant secretary of state.

Chairman Mengistu Haile Mariam, head of the Soviet-backed Ethiopian government, announced in a Revolutionary day speech two weeks ago that the resettlement program will resume shortly, said Mark L. Edelman, an assistant administrator at the Agency for International Development.

Messrs. Keyes and Edelman made their remarks in testimony before a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee.

The subject of the hearing before the subcommittee on international economic policy and trade was a bill sponsored by Rep. Toby Roth of Wisconsin, the panel's ranking Republican. The bill would impose tough economic sanctions against Ethiopia.

The bill has virtually no chance of enactment this year. Nevertheless, Mr. Roth said, the hearing would help keep the issue alive.

"The people of Ethiopia are dying," Mr. Roth said after the hearing. "We know that over 100,000 people have perished because of the resettlement program. We are going to do everything we can to prevent slaughter of these people."

The Ethiopian government in 1984 began a mass movement of inhabitants of the drought-stricken highlands to more fertile lowlands, where they have been forced into crowded villages, Mr. Edelman said.

"This massive program, which is completely changing the fabric of rural Ethiopia, requires families to literally destroy their ancestral homes and relocate in new areas," he said.

"The great fear is that the government's ultimate purpose is full collectivization of all land," he said.

Mr. Edelman quoted from an official Ethiopia "Villagization Handbook."

"The long-term aim of our revolution is, of course, the emancipation of the population from spiritual influence and enhance their belief in materialism," the handbook say.

The handbook also calls for tolerating religious institutions during an interim period in order to "make villagization palatable," he said.

One of the immediate purposes of the relocation program, according to a widely held view, was to isolate members of the population who would support rebel forces engaged in a civil war in the nation's Northern provinces.

The Soviets and the Ethiopians are preparing for a new offensive against rebels in the provinces of Eritrea and Tigre, according to Aradom Tedla, an Ethiopian exile who formerly served as a minister of law and justice.

The offensive will involve 3,000 to 4,000 Soviet officers—the largest number in any of the previous eight offensives planned by Soviet strategists—Mr. Tedla said yesterday.

Separatist rebels in Eritrea have been battling the Marxist government and its predecessor, the regime of the late Emperor Haile Selassie, for nearly 25 years.

Mr. Tedla, who was arrested by the Ethiopian government in 1979 and fled to Somalia in 1980 after his release, spoke on "The Impact of Marxist Rule in Ethiopia" at a recent forum on human rights in Africa.

He is president of the African Human Rights Committee.

Ten years under Col. Mengistu—whose 300,000-man army is the largest in Africa and is fortified with $3 billion in Soviet arms—have left the country one of "fear, hunger and death," he said.

ILLITERACY IN AMERICA: A NON-RACIAL PROBLEM

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, the remarks of Japanese Prime Minister Nakasone concerning illiteracy in America were widely denounced in the media and by national leaders. We should be aware, however, of the comments of local leaders, because these are the people who work most closely with everyday members of the community.

Assemblywoman Geraldine L. Daniels of Harlem has long been an outspoken advocate of equal opportunity for all Americans. She is a leading champion in New York for adequate housing, fair government, and public welfare. Few local leaders can equal her zeal for the betterment of her community.

Assemblywoman Daniels has written a very thoughtful statement on illiteracy and the Nakasone statement. I would like to submit it for inclusion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

STATEMENT BY ASSEMBLYWOMAN GERALDINE L. DANIELS

If news reports are true that the Prime Minister of Japan said that the reason U.S. citizens intelligence is so low or its illiteracy is so high is because of Blacks and Hispanics, statistics do not indicate so. Last May the Department of Education released a Census Bureau study that said between 17 and 21 million U.S. adults are illiterate for an overall rate of nearly 13%. The population of America is over 225,000,000.

The study found that 41% of adult illiterates in the United States live in urban areas compared with 8% in rural areas. Also, said the survey, 56% are under the age of 50 and 50% do not speak English at home. According to education specialist Judith Koloski, two groups make up the bulk of those deficient in literacy skills, "the number of High School dropouts in the country is, at least, remaining steady or decreasing very lightly. These people are added to the pool".

As an Assemblywoman representing Harlem, this means, Black, White, Asians, and Hispanics. Not just Black and Minority, or Japanese in this country.

Speaking about Asians coming to this free country as well as other foreigners, Ms. Koloski said, "the number of foreign born coming into this country adds to the number of illiterates. The first wave of immigrants from Laos and Cambodia were all literate in their own language. The second and third wave immigrants were illiterate in their own languages as well as in ours. They added immediately to the pool.

The Department of Education's Adult Literacy Initiative Director Karl O. Hagler says, "the elderly are also a major factor". This includes all Americans. Not just Black and Minorities.

The Japanese Prime Minister should be very careful in isolating Blacks as being responsible for either America's low intelligence or high illiteracy.

In the first place the Japanese people have never been enslaved. But they have been enslavers. Ask the people of Korea and Manchuria. In spite of being slaves in America, Black Americans have contributed much to the advancement of mankind in the world.

A Black American Man invented the traffic light that the Japanese use today.

A Black American Man invented the shoe last that the Japanese use to make their shoes.

A Black American Man helped develop the telephone that the Japanese use.

It was a Black American Surgeon, Dr. Daniel Hale Williams, who first perfected the techniques of Heart surgery that is performed around the world today that is saving Japanese lives and lives around the world.

It was Black American soliders who treated the Japanese civilly during the occupation of its country.

If Black Americans are so illiterate, I shall immediately ask all Black Americans to stop buying Japanese products unless we get an apology from the Prime Minister.

In conclusion it was not illiterate Black Americans who stole valuable and one of a kind in the world micro chips to improve Japanese computers, so that they could compete against American made computers in the world market.

Also it is Black Americans who always agreed with the American government to not shut out imports from Japan, even though it costs Black Americans jobs.

Japan should do the same. Do not shut out American made goods including Black American made goods.

WHAT AMERICANISM MEANS TO ME

HON. DONALD J. PEASE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, again this year it gives me great pleasure to share with my colleagues the following winning essays from the "What Americanism Means to Me" contest that is an annual event in my district.

WHAT AMERICANISM MEANS TO ME

First Prize Winner Mr. James Vaszily, Jr., Junior, Elyria High School, Elyria, OH

"I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country." This quotation by Nathan Hale is probably one of the first vocal expressions of Americanism in the New World: Americanism that was here to stay. In this quotation, Hale embodies his and his countrymen's allegiance to the ideals of freedom, justice, and equality for all, regardless of race or creed, for which America stands. It is because of the heroic efforts of such men as Nathan Hale, George Washington, and all those that fought in the Revolutionary War that Americanism was born. Americanism shows the world the greatness of the American nation and her people's belief in the ideology and principles of democracy.

It is Americanism that has made this country so great and has proven to the world the true meaning of freedom and equality for all. Americanism is the deep attachment of its citizens to the traditions, interests, ideals, and values that have evolved from a country with political principles that serve all the people. Americanism creates ideals that allow all people to contribute to the glory of this beloved nation. Americanism has allowed scientists in all fields to develop such technological discoveries as the artificial heart, harnessing of atomic energy, computers, and designs for better rockets that will lead to the permanent colonization of space. We would not possess such technological innovations if it were not for Americanism.

Americanism has motivated our literary community to reflect Americanism in their writings. Francis Scott Key, Patrick Henry, and Benjamin Franklin were all brilliant men who produced great works for their country that inspired their countrymen. Authors such as Nathaniel Hawthorne, Washington Irving, Edgar Allan Poe, and Samuel Clemens gave American Literature the world respect that it deserves.

In its greatness, Americanism serves not only the American people, but the whole world. Americanism contributes to all of humanity. U.S.A. for Africa, Live Aid, Peace Corps, and the Red Cross have made our world a better place to live. Martin Luther King, Jr. demonstrated how to use Americanism to serve and benefit everybody in the Civil Rights Movement. Simon Bolivar was inspired by Americanism and brought freedom to five countries in South America. Mahatma Ghandi was also inspired by Americanism and brought freedom to his people peacefully.

Americanism is the defender of world peace. N.A.T.O., the United Nations, and summit meetings with leaders of the Soviet Union demonstrates how Americanism is pioneering for world peace. Americanism is striving to make war extinct instead of mankind. Americanism's goal is to make all men free so they can prosper and live in peace.

It is quite evident how Americanism influences this great nation and the world. Americanism is pride in ourselves and country, self-confidence in ourselves and others to make our country better and stronger, and the love of brotherhood towards all people. Americanism verifies what Abraham Lincoln said—We are "a government of the people, by the people, and for the people . . ." Americanism strengthens our Great Democracy so that future generations will be able to inherit the blessings of freedom we enjoy now. We are the only government in the world that offers true democracy and true freedom for all people. It is because of all that the word Americanism embodies that I take the great pride in saying, "I am proud to be an American."

WHAT AMERICANISM MEANS TO ME

Second Prize Winner Miss Christine Smith, Junior, St. Paul High School, Norwalk, OH

The words Americanism represents an ideal situation, new beginnings and opportunities. Americanism means freedom. America not only has freed other nations but allows for more freedom than any other country I know of. Freedom of speech, religion, education, press, freedom to pursue a career or to make a dream come true. Our ancestors fought hard for our rights and privileges during the American Revolutionary War. What did Americanism mean to them? It meant patriotism, hard work, and willingness to lay down one's life for one's beliefs.

Americanism is knowledge. Immediate understanding of world events—good or bad. We are barely sheltered from anything. The United States has the best media coverage of all countries of the world. Our country wouldn't be what it is today if we didn't have freedom of the press. This directly goes along with the right to speak one's mind. I feel that is one of the greatest aspects of Americanism. Judging from what history I've had, it seems many great ideas started out not so great but people fought for these ideas by speaking their minds.

For people who aren't familiar with the United States, Americanism is virtually a mystery. Just recently, I have had the experience of meeting and talking with a dissident of the Soviet Union, specifically, a young man named Victor Borovsky, originally from the Ukraine now living in Canada. Americanism is a privilege which has never and will never exist in the Soviet Union. Victor Borovsky introduced new startling ideas of life without freedom to me and 100 other young people. Machine guns, barbed-wire fences, and an environment of violence are three examples of obstacles to everyday life.

I can't even imagine no freedom of religion. To me, what makes a group an intelligent, unique, working organization such as America is the uniqueness of the individuals. Here, we live by our spiritual laws and our government's laws with no worrying—separation of church and state.

Besides religion and personal opinions, there is another way to stress one's individuality: background and ancestry. The United States, termed the melting pot, combines all nationalities. Why, for centuries and even today, do men and women flock to America? It's the "land of the free and home of the brave"; a chance to make something of yourself. Americanism is opportunity. Here, we have the choices to determine what our lives will be like. It's called social mobility. So many great persons have carved their own way to the top—and have stayed there.

Americanism is also responsibility to uphold, to the best of one's ability, one's duties. Duties to the world, to the rest of the country, the community and to one's own self and to God. Americans are leaders. We have to keep this country alive, and give it support. This is done by voting and simply exercising the freedoms given to us.

In summary, the term Americanism entails several ideas and ideals. First, it's freedom. Next, Americanism means history—the U.S. has survived a great deal and every part is important to our over-all make-up. It involves duties, patriotism, traditions, mixed cultures, loyalty to each citizen. Americanism represents the beliefs and values shared by Americans and admired by all.

DRUG ABUSE ESSAY CONTEST WINNERS

HON. LAWRENCE J. SMITH

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, today I congratulate 14 students in my district on their outstanding essays against drug abuse. More than 5,000 sixth graders were invited to enter a congressional drug abuse essay contest. These winners were chosen as the best in each of the 14 schools which participated. Of the 14, 5 will compete with essays from other congressional districts around the country.

The students were asked to write their views in 50 words or less on two topics: Part I: "What I Would Do If Offered Drugs" and part II: "As A Good Citizen, How Can I Help My Community?"

The results of this contest show that many of our youngsters do understand the terrible effects of drugs. They all realize that drugs won't solve their problems and that the best solution is to "say no" to drugs. I hope they will be the future leaders of a generation that eliminates this cancer in our society.

I am also very proud of all the participants and the staffs and teachers of the schools. I believe this contest enabled parents and teachers to work together to further educate our children, while they are still young, about the dangers of drugs.

For the benefit of my colleagues, I herewith include the five best essays along with the name of the winner, the school, and the principal. I also have listed the names of the nine other winners.

Winner: Lourdes Bernal, Everglades Elementary School Prinicipal: Dr. Frazier Cheyney.

Part I—If I were offered drugs, I'd just say no! There is no reason for me to accept drugs. Drugs aren't good for me and they won't solve my problems. They"ll just make my problems worse. If I say no I'll be helping the fight against drugs.

Part II—As a good citizen I can help my community by reporting any drug activity I see or suspect. I can also help by stopping anyone I can from using drugs. Drugs are harmful to person's lives. They don't only make people addicts, but they also contribute to crime.

Winner: Marci Lerner, Pines Middle School. Principal: Jamie Davidson.

Part I—Besides saying "no" to drugs, I would report the person offering them to a teacher, rabbi or minister. People who push drugs need help, not only from law enforcement but also from drug education programs and people who will listen to their problems.

Part II—I can help my community by becoming involved in community affairs and government. People must be taught that along with civil rights go civil responsibilities. People must be made aware of what they can do to help others improve the quality of life.

Winner: Alfie Monthei, Attucks Middle School. Principal: Margarita Hall.

Part I—If I was offered drugs, I would say "no thanks." I feel you don't have to be high to have fun.

Part II—I can help my community by setting a good example and not taking drugs, drinking alcohol, or smoking. I can help my community by getting involved in community activities.

Winner: Kristen Meyers, Olsen Middle School. Principal: George Schafer.

Part I—I have an enormous amount of love for my family and if anything ever happened to me due to drugs it would distress them deeply. My life has been fruitful and I would not want to ruin it on something that would only give me temporary relief.

Part II—In today's world I would be frightened to find out about a serious crime. Most citizens would probably feel the same and instead report traffic violations and pick up litter. I hope such problems will be eliminated, but until then that is what I could do for my community.

Winner: Russell Moon, H.D. Perry Middle School. Principal: Dr. Everett Putney.

Part I—Let's take this whole thing into perspective; pleasure is created by things that come naturally, the inner feelings. If offered drugs, I'd reply "no thanks." I'm a person with simple pleaures, the best kind.

Part II—In respect to helping my community, I can simply avoid corruption of the mind and body.

Other winners:

Winner: Lisa Garcia, Annunciation Catholic School. Principal: Lucretia Furst.

Winner: Miriam Valdes, Village Green Elementary School. Principal: Camille King.

Winner: Jennifer Feifer, Nova Middle School. Principal: Suzanne Alvord.

Winner: Luandrala Warner, Driftwood Middle School. Principal: Frank Campana.

Winner: Rotarsha King, North Glade Elementary School. Principal: Herbert Day.

Winner: Christina Morera, Rockway Elementary School. Principal: Tessa Gold.

Winner: Joel Sunstrom, Pioneer Middle School. Principal: Kenneth Black.

Winner: Odenia Rodriguez, Olympia Heights Elementary School. Principal: Clifford Herrman.

Winner: Mark Cates, Palm Springs North Elementary School. Principal: Robert Gray.

CONGRATULATIONS TO SNOW HILL ON ITS 300TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. BARBARA A. MIKULSKI

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to bring to the attention of my colleagues, the 300th anniversary of a very special town on Maryland's Eastern Shore, Snow Hill, MD.

Snow Hill was settled in 1630 by English and Scottish colonists as well as Virginia dissidents. Located along the shores of the Pocomoke River, Snow Hill flourished as a trade center. In October 1686, it received its charter as a town and it is now the 300th anniversary of that charter which Snow Hill celebrates on October 25 and 26, 1986.

In 1742 Snow Hill became the county seat of newly formed Worcester County. Schooners and sloops plied the waters of the Pocomoke River up to Snow Hill which served as a business and political center for the surrounding area. Soon steamboats provided regular contact to Baltimore for passengers and freight. Today, the Pocomoke River continues its role in the community as a recreational waterway.

Snow Hill today is a place rich in historic buildings and traditions. They proudly celebrate their 300th year of history. I join my colleagues from Maryland and across the Nation, particularly First District congressional Representative, Roy Dyson, in recognizing this great center of Maryland's rich colonial heritage.

TIME RUNNING OUT ON CHILDREN'S VACCINES

HON. DOUG WALGREN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I want to call to the attention of my colleagues the urgent need for Congress to act on a bill developed in the Energy and Commerce Health Subcommittee and cosponsored by my distinguished colleague, Mr. WAXMAN. The bill, the National Childhood Vaccine Injury Compensation Act (H.R. 5546), has been reported by the committee and awaits action by the Ways and Means Committee which must develop an excise tax on vaccines to pay for the compensation fund. The Ways and Means Committee has had its hands full of late with the tax bill, Superfund and budget resolution, but I do hope they are able to deal with this measure and send it to the House before we adjourn.

I would like to share with other Members an article by Mr. WAXMAN which appeared in today's Washington Post and makes a cogent and compelling case for this bill. The bill is a carefully crafted compromise that addresses a most serious problem.

WHEN A VACCINE INJURES A CHILD: A NO-FAULT WAY TO COMPENSATE

Childhood immunization programs have created a public health miracle in this country. In 1952 there were 57,000 cases of paralytic polio; last year there were four. In 1941 there were more than 2,200 deaths from measles in a single year; last year there were two.

Every state requires that children be immunized before they start school. With vaccines, we have avoided thousands of deaths, hundreds of thousands of disabilities and millions of dollars in medical costs.

But these vaccines, which we take for granted now, are not completely safe. Some children will suffer adverse side effects for a few days. Some will face severe reactions, even mental retardation, permanent disability or death. There will not be many such reactions (for polio vaccine, for example, it is literally a one-in-a-million chance), but some children will be hurt.

The particular tragedy and the paradox of vaccine injuries is that these children really are hurt in the line of public duty. They are required to receive vaccinations not just for their own protection but also for the group immunity necessary to protect the population from disease and from the catastrophic medical costs of epidemics.

But unlike veterans who are injured in war or workers injured on the job, these children have no place to file their grievances or turn for care. The schools and clinics and private pediatricians who administer the shots are not prepared to take care of lifetime injury.

Many of the families of these children have been turning to the courts for relief. They have brought suits for negligence, for failure to warn, for design defect, for breach of warranty, for inadequate research. Some of these families have won—sometimes millions of dollars. Many more have lost.

But the litigation costs and the occasional million-dollar award have made pharmaceutical firms nervous about the vaccine market. These firms say that this sort of thing can make it less profitable to prevent illness than to treat it. They say that affordable insurance is increasingly hard to find and that they make the best vaccine they know how to and still lose lawsuits. One result, they say, it that they are forced to increase prices drastically, or simply to get out of the market.

These are complex arguments, but it is clear that the vaccine injury controversy has slowed progress in the development of preventive health care. And it is clear that a number of vaccine-injured children are being left to fend for themselves on Medicaid or disability or whatever else may be available.

Many of these arguments have been made this year about other liability fights. But vaccines are a unique product. They are required for all children. They are regulated before, during and after production. They are inherently unsafe. And we cannot afford to be without them.

A broad array of conservatives and liberals, consumer advocates and pharmaceutical lobbyists has crafted a compromise bill—the National Childhood Vaccine Injury Compensation Act—that is now either almost law or almost history. It has passed the review of doctors and parents and manufacturers and lawyers, but it has not yet passed Congress.

The bill would establish a generous no-fault compensation system to pay for the medical, rehabilitation and education costs of those children who are injured. If the injury were particularly severe, the program would pay for lost earnings of the disabled child and for the pain and suffering that he or she endures.

In turn, the bill would limit that child's ability to sue the manufacturer of the vaccine. If an injury is the result of a bad vaccine or one inadequately researched or warned of, then the courts could still make awards. But those children who are the innocent statistics of the necessary war on infectious disease would not have to go to court to get their medical bills paid.

The compensation fund would be paid for by an excise tax on vaccines. The tax would differ on each vaccine, according to how dangerous it is known to be. The final price of a shot would thus reflect its true cost to the society, and those children who avoid the dangers of whooping cough would help pay for those children who reacted to the whooping cough vaccine.

The bill is no one's first choice. The parents' group wants fewer restrictions on litigation and more children eligible for compensation. The manufacturers want more protections from tort action and less specificity about awards. The doctors want to close off malpractice suits.

But almost everyone agrees that the compensation bill is better than the current situation. No one wants to return to the terrors of epidemics of crippling and killing disease.

Congress is dealing with the tax bill and with the budget. Before we leave, we must also finish this ounce of preventive work. We cannot afford the pounds of cure.

COLUMBIA RIVER GORGE DESERVES FEDERAL PROTECTION THIS YEAR

HON. DON BONKER

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, the Columbia River Gorge, which cuts through the Cascade Mountains between Oregon and Washington, is an area of unique and dramatic beauty. Its towering waterfalls, verdant forests, and diverse characteristics have awed residents and visitors for centuries. Without immediate Federal protection, more of the gorge's natural beauty will be lost to development.

Complicating the task of preserving the famous scenery of the gorge is the fact that the 85-mile long ravine cuts through six counties and two State, and is home to some 40,000 people. The House and Senate delegations from the area have crafted a measure which can save the scenery without undermining the economic viability of the area. The bill would also balance Federal, State, and local interest in managing the public and private lands in the gorge.

Efforts to protect the beauty of the gorge date back to the 1930's. This year, in the remaining days of the 99th Congress, we are tantalizingly close to enactment of legislation that will accomplish this goal. I commend the following article from the National Journal to the attention of my colleagues and trust that the gorge legislation will get the timely support from Congress it deserves.

[From the National Journal, Oct. 4, 1986]

COMPROMISING

The towering cliffs and plunging waterfalls that line the Columbia River Gorge on the Washington-Oregon border "really do take the breath away," exclaimed an eastern conservationist who is no stranger to scenic beauty. "When I first saw the gorge, my initial reaction was: Why didn't they get it protected 50 years ago?"

"They" tried. Since 1937, citizens groups, state study commissions and federal parks officials have been pushing for federal protection of the 85-mile long Columbia River Gorge. Not only is the gorge spectacularly beautiful but it also contains prehistoric Indian structures, campsites that were used by Lewis and Clark, one of the earliest highways and other natural and historic sites that have caught preservationists' fancies over the years. But interstate politics, local opposition and a host of other complications have always stymied the protection efforts.

But preservationists are still trying. This year, they may succeed. Friends of Columbia Gorge, a conservation group headquartered in Portland, Ore., has been holding nonstop meetings with interested Members of Congress to try to patch together a compromise Columbia River Gorge National Scenic Area bill (S. 2055).

Whenever the outcome of the latest legislative campaign, the long-running battle for the gorge teaches important lessons about the nature and direction of conservation politics.

Lesson one is a reminder—for idealistic conservationists who have refused to take no for an answer—that the day of massive federal park acquisitions is over, probably forever. For decades, Columbia Gorge protagonists tried to get the federal government simply to buy the land as a national park. Now, they don't even ask.

Even though a moratorium on park acquisitions imposed in the early years of the Reagan Administration didn't last, large land purchases are no longer feasible. It's more than just the multimillion dollar price tag in an era of multibillion dollar budget deficits. Much of the land isn't for sale. Some of it is owned by private parties, including 13 towns and cities within the boundaries of the gorge. Other portions that the federal government owns—such as the hydroelectric power facility at Bonneville and the Dalles dams—aren't available for conversion into a park. In fact, about 50 federal, state and local government agencies have authority over different parts of the gorge.

Lesson two, a corollary of lesson one, is that few large scenic tracts remain unclaimed. When President Grant created Yellowstone National Park as the first national park in 1872, millions of acres of untouched natural beauty were there for the choosing. Little, if any, land in the lower 48 states is now so unfettered. Any proposals to preserve the gorge run headlong into plans—equally justifiable to many who live there—to make use of it. Local developers have residential development plans for parts of the gorge that are adjacent to the urban areas. The timber industry has logging plans for the forest lands owned by the Forest Service.

Lesson three is that lessons one and two don't necessarily mean that special scenic, natural or historic places have to be abandoned. Federal, state and local officials, along with private groups, are working out ingenious ways to protect these sites while permitting late-20th century civilization to proceed unimpeded by conservationists' rules.

The Columbia River Gorge bill is the latest in a series of efforts to tailor protective regulations to the needs of politics of a particular area. The bill would set up a three-tiered arrangement under which the federal government would protect 108,000 acres designated as "special management areas," a bistate commission appointed by the governors of Oregon and Washington would manage 140,000 acres in which development would be controlled, and the 28,000 acres already in the hands of cities and towns would be exempted from any kind of control.

This would be a variation on such innovative partnerships as the Pinelands National Reserve in New Jersey, which relies on state zoning rules to prohibit or limit development in sensitive parts of the 1 million-acre area and encourage it in others. Similarly, the 225,000-acre Santa Monica Mountains National Recreation Area combines federal, state and private ownership to set various levels of protection and development. In Florida, the campaign to save the Everglades ecosystem is based upon another version of federal, state and private conservation efforts.

The President's Commission on America's Outdoors is struggling to develop a scheme for the national stewardship of all parks and other natural areas. At the center of the commission's vision of the future are what the commission tentatively calls "greenway systems." These are pieces of territory that have been used for various purposes in thc past and that the commission believes can be turned into natural or recreational areas. They include utility corridors, old railroad rights-of-way and scenic roads and highways.

While conservationists are enthusiastic about the reuse of abandoned facilities—there's a new organization called Rails to Trails that has been set up solely to seek conversion of abandoned rail lines to nature trails—they are skeptical of a scheme that emphasizes recycling used sites rather than preserving pristine areas.

In the Columbia River Gorge, the conservationists are trying to accomplish a variety of goals at once—to save some relatively untouched natural areas, preserve historically important man-made structures, provide for recreational activities and allow for some economic development. No single model will work on a national scale, but the creativity of combining objectives could serve as a model for those developing a national program.

If the Columbia Gorge bill doesn't pass this year, a different version undoubtedly will be sewn together next year by conservationists, local development interests and the politicians. And if that fails, the various forces that have been sparring since 1937 are unlikely to give up. Lesson four is that these people don't quit.

U.S. JAYCEE HEALTHY AMERI - CAN FITNESS LEADER AWARDS

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mrs. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to congratulate two of the recipients of the U.S. Jaycees Healthy American Fitness Leaders Awards, President Ronald Reagan and Mr. Kirk Bauer, the executive director of the National Handicapped Sports and Recreation Association. These significant awards are administered in cooperation with the President's Council on Fitness and Sports and are sponsored by Allstate Life Insurance Co.

The U.S. Jaycees has demonstrated a keen understanding of the courage and determination which it takes to be a model of fitness for all other Americans. President Reagan has demonstrated his vibrancy both of mind and body time and time again while executing the many tasks of his office. At the age of 75, President Reagan serves as an example to Americans of all ages of the power of healthy living and an optimistic, resilient philosophy of life.

Mr. Kirk Bauer serves as an inspiration to all individuals who have faced obstacles and seemingly impossible challenges and doubted if they measured up to the task. A disabled veteran of the Vietnam war, Kirk Bauer has dedicated himself and his family to achieving health and physical fitness for others by helping them battle their disability. Mr. Bauer has also been recognized for his outstanding service in the rehabilitation of other Vietnam veterans. A Bronze Star and Purple Heart recipient for heroism and now the recipient of the Healthy American Fitness Leader Award, Mr. Bauer along with the other winners upholds the fine tradition of service recognized and perpetuated by the U.S. Jaycees.

I applaud the foresight of the Jaycees for their recognition of the importance of fitness in healthy and productive lives and I also applaud Allstate for its sponsorship of this worthy program.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. THOMAS J. TAUKE

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Speaker, because of the birth of my first son, Joseph Hubble Tauke, I was unable to be present for votes No. 443, the conference report on H.R. 2005, Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act of 1986; and No. 444, the House Joint Resolution 750, making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1987. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea" on No. 443 and "nay" on No. 444.

THE ICELAND "PRE-SUMMIT"

HON. BARBARA BOXER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev will meet in just 2 days in Reykjavik, Iceland. All of us hope that they will reach agreement on at least some key issues.

As we wait and watch and hope, I want to call to the attention of my colleagues a recent letter sent by over 50 organizations to President Reagan, encouraging agreement on three major arms control issues.

This large coalition in support of these priorities is unique—and I believe is a clear indication of the breadth and depth of American commitment to the need for meaningful arms control.

Mr. Speaker, the text of the letter, and a listing of the groups signing it, follows:

OCTOBER 8, 1986.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House,
Washington, DC.

DEAR PRESIDENT REAGAN: We, the undersigned organizations, urge that our government, as the representative of all U.S. citizens, take the strongest possible steps to end the nuclear arms race. We urge that you put high on your agenda in Iceland a halt to all testing of nuclear and space weapons and reaffirmation of a mutual commitment to abide by all existing strategic arms agreements.

We applaud all progress that can be made toward reductions in intermediate or strategic nuclear missiles. The following measures that we recommend will complement those efforts, and they are easily achievable as they build on already-existing restraints:

U.S. agreement to join the Soviet moratorium on nuclear testing that they have observed since August 1985, and immediate resumption of Comprehensive Test Ban negotiations to codify a permanent ban on testing;

Continuation of the current US/USSR moratorium on antisatellite (ASAT) weapons, since satellites are essential for verification of arms control agreements;

Reaffirmation of a mutual commitment to abide by existing treaties, including the Anti-Ballistic Missile (ABM) and Strategic Arms Limitation Treaties (SALT), to establish an atmosphere in which additional agreements can be negotiated.

We believe that these measures—in addition to other progress on weapons reductions—are the minimum steps that must be taken now to move our world away from the threat of nuclear annihilation. These measures build on the ten arms control treaties negotiated by six previous Presidents.

You travel to Iceland with the hopes of millions of Americans. Your two days in Iceland can produce results which will make our world safer for generations to come.

WASTE END TAX

HON. CLAUDINE SCHNEIDER

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Miss SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the House voted on final passage of a historic Superfund bill. Regrettably, it did not include a waste-end tax. I would like to submit for the RECORD the following information explaining the elements of the waste-end tax, which was included in the House's version of the Superfund legislation.

The Superfund financing bill approved by the House includes a tax on the disposal of hazardous waste that has been endorsed by the Administration. The tax would be limited to disposal of federally regulated hazardous waste in facilities regulated under the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA).

The waste-end tax is a fair financing mechanism because it is limited to those waste disposal activities that have caused the Superfund problem. The House bill exempts from the tax all waste-water treatment, incineration, and recycling, as well as mining and paper wastes.

In addition to having the enthusiastic support of the White House, the waste-end tax has been endorsed by the Congressional Budget Office, the Office of Technology Assessment, the National Governors Association, the Environmental Policy Institute, a broad array of manufacturers, and economists such as Murray Weidenbaum, former Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors (CEA), and William Nordhaus, former CEA member.

Rates and Revenues (House Compromise)

$500 million over five years.

Rates rise gradually from $9.25 to $11.75 per ton over five years for federally regulated hazardous waste placed in all land disposal facilities (except injection wells) regulated under Resource Conservation and Recovery Act.

Establishes rate of $1.05 per ton for injection wells to allow for dilute nature of injected wastes.

The House bill exempts the following from the waste-end tax

All wastes not covered by RCRA on the date of enactment.

All mining and paper wastes.

All waste management activities exempt from the RCRA system, including temporary on-site storage.

Most forms of treatment, including wastewater treatment, incineration, and recycling.

Wastes removed from Superfund sites during cleanup.

The waste-end tax is fair, because

According to 1985 Treasury testimony, "the tax would be paid in large measure by those industries that generate the hazardous wastes that are believed to be responsible for many of the existing Superfund sites."

It would include industries that currently generate large volumes of waste, but do not pay feedstock taxes (such as commercial waste disposal companies).

A waste-end tax is workable because

The tax is based on existing RCRA rules, regulations, and reporting requirements. According to the Treasury Department, "the Internal Revenue Service would not be required to develop new information systems to collect and enforce the tax, nor would taxpayers be required to maintain separate books and records."

Revenue estimates from the waste-end tax are conservative, because they allow for the reduction of waste disposal in response to the disincentive effects of the tax and the upcoming bans on land disposal.

A study by the American Bar Association's Tax Committee found that a waste-end tax could be workable.

According to EPA and the Treasury Department, the tax would not create a significant incentive for midnight dumping: "Because the cost of the tax is small compared to the cost of the RCRA sanctions, generators of small quantities of hazardous waste would have virtually no incentive for illegal disposal."

More than twenty states have had workable waste-end taxes in place for several years.

A waste-end tax would not place an unreasonable burden on chemical companies because

The chemical industry manages the overwhelming proportion of its waste in wastewater treatment impoundments and injection wells. Wastewater treatment impoundments are exempt from the tax, and injection wells are subject to lower tax rates.

A waste-end tax would not affect the petrochemical industry's trade position significantly because

The impact of a domestic waste-end tax on international trade would be "miniscule" when compared to other factors, according to Treasury testimony in 1985.

The waste-end tax can be avoided through investment in such tax-exempt activities as incineration or recycling. Our European competitors have already opted for high-technology treatment. West Germany, our second largest competitor, generates only one-third as much toxic waste per citizen as the U.S.

Hon. DAN ROSTENKOWSKI, OCTOBER 1, 1986.

Chairman, House Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: We are writing to reaffirm our opposition to the use of broad-based taxes for Superfund. No matter how they are structured, broad-based taxes share one distinguishing feature: they would be imposed on manufacturers irrespective of their contribution to the hazardous waste problem. Broad-based taxes thus violate the "polluter-pay" principle that is a cornerstone of federal environmental policy. Studies show that, whether measured according to current waste management practices or past contribution to abandoned dumpsites, the petrochemical industry is responsible for 70 to 83% of the Superfund problem.

We strongly support a waste-end tax and urge its inclusion in any Superfund financing package for the following reasons. First and most obviously, it establishes the clearest nexus between Superfund and the kind of industrial waste management practices that have been linked to the cleanup problem. That is why the Administration supports it, and why the Treasury Department informed the Committee that "the tax would be paid in large measure by those industries that are believed to be responsible for many of the existing Superfund sites." We note that some of the companies we represent will be subject to a waste-end tax, to the extend that they engage in manufacturing activities that generate waste for land disposal.

The logic of requiring industries that dispose of hazardous waste in landfills to contribute to Superfund is irrefutable. That is why the waste-end tax has been endorsed by economists such as Murray Weidenbaum and William Nordhaus as well as the Office of Technology Assessment, the Congressional Budget Office, and the Environmental Policy Institute. Not long ago, as Members of the Committee may remember, the most enthusiastic proponent of waste-end taxes was the Chemical Manufacturers Association, which argued that, "A waste-end tax would internalize the cost of waste disposal by placing its cost on the waste disposed of today, not on someone else tomorrow." The Dow Corporation went as far as to commission a public opinion poll that showed overwhelming support for a waste-disposal tax; ARCO commissioned a study by Bill Nordhaus that concluded that, "a waste disposal tax would be a useful and environmentally sound source of revenues."

It is well established that the waste-end tax, which has received far more study than any of the other financing mechanisms before the conference committee, is administratively feasible. The Treasury Department and the EPA both concluded after a thorough review that a waste-end tax could be easily administered as it would be based on existing RCRA rules, regulations, and reporting requirements. According to Treasury, "the Internal Revenue Service would not be required to develop new information systems to collect and enforce the tax, now would taxpayers be required to maintain separate books and records." The American Bar Association's Tax Committee, after exhautive review, concluded that the waste-end tax was workable.

We also strongly support relying on a petroleum excise tax to provide a major portion of Superfund financing. Oil is the basic feedstock from which petrochemicals are derived; in addition, oil wastes have been found at scores of Superfund sites. Yet a tax on petroleum would be spread among all users of oil products, including the industries we represent. A 12 cent tax per barrel of oil would add about a quarter of a penny to the price of oil products. These low rates would not affect consumers, the petrochemical industry or independent refiners, and are dwarfed by the much higher severance taxes imposed by states like Texas. It is not surprising that the oil lobby has produced no evidence that a petroleum excise tax would be harmful to their industry in any way.

Finally, we encourage the use of general revenues, as is provided in current law, to supplement the financing of Superfund. The administration has expressed support for relying in part on a general revenue contribution as an alternative to establishing new, broad-based taxes.

The conference committee stands at an important crossroads. It must decide whether to risk a Presidential veto by enacting an unpopular broad-base tax that will be inflicted on thousands of businesses with no connection whatsoever to the hazardous waste management problem, or to stand by the "polluter pays" principle that guides our environmental policy. We urge the committee to take the wiser course.

We appreciate your steadfast support of the position that the polluting industries should bear the major share of the cost of financing Superfund, and ask you to stand by that principle as the reauthorization process draws to a close.

Thank you for considering our views.

WHAT OTHERS SAY ABOUT THE WASTE-END TAX

"The underlying philosophy of this approach (the waste-end tax) would be to reward those who minimize future risks and costs to society through the use of preferred alternatives which permanently reduce the risks involved in hazardous waste managements." Office of Technology Assessment (OTA), March 1983.

"Taxing producers rather than polluters does little to curb the actual dumping of waste. A waste-end fee on hazardous waste disposal would be more economically sound. It would (1) provide an incentive to reduce the actual output of hazardous waste, (2) promote development of recycling and reuse systems, (3) encourage alternative disposal technologies, and (4) cover the disposal of products produced overseas. In short, rewriting the Superfund law so that it is more fair would also help protect the environment—and would probably save money at the same time." Dr. Murray L. Weidenbaum, Center For Study of American Business, Washington University, August 1984.

"A tax on waste disposal makes sense. It would provide a fiscal incentive—the kind the private sector understands—to minimize the generation and facilitate the disposal of hazardous wastes." David Friebert, National Center For Legislative Research, August, 1984.

"The Congress finds that in order to adequately protect human health and the environment from hazardous substances, pollutants, and contaminants it is necessary to create a waste-end tax on the land disposal of hazardous substances which will discourage the environmentally unsound disposal of hazardous substances and provide additional revenues for the Superfund." Amendment Adopted By Unanimous Voice Vote, Floor of House of Representatives, 9 August 1984.

"(Under a waste-end tax) changes in behavior may include a reduction in the quantity of waste disposed or generated, higher costs for on-site waste-management and higher prices for off-site waste management. Careful tax design can ensure that the adverse consequences of these economic affects are minimized and that the changes that do occur will be consistent with overall policy goals.

"The experience of several states indicates that, in spite of some initial difficulty in estimating revenues, the waste-end tax is also capable of generating significant amounts of revenue." The Environmental Protection Agency, A Report To the Congress On The Agency's Experience With Superfund, December 1984.

"Recent EPA figures show that over 120 billion pounds of hazardous waste are disposed of on or in the land every year. The current method for paying to clean up abandoned sites requiring corrective action provides no incentive for disposers to reduce this waste. A waste-end tax would, for the first time, provide a direct pocketbook incentive to minimize the land disposal of hazardous waste. A waste-end tax would internalize the cost of waste disposal by placing its cost on the waste disposed today, not one on someone else tomorrow." The Chemical Manufacturers Association, Spring 1985.

"Fees and taxes on the landfilling of waste, and waste-end taxes on the generation of waste, are direct mechanisms for making other waste management options more competitive with the use of landfills for some waste." "Reducing Hazardous Waste Generation", National Academy of Sciences, Spring 1985.

"By taxing the disposal of wastes at rates which encourage treatment or recycling alternatives, the Schneider/Wyden proposal will increase the revenue flowing into the Superfund Trust fund while diminishing the amount of waste being discarded . . . Your contribution to the Superfund Debate is a careful approach to encouraging the shift of wastes to treatment and recycling facilities which will increase in number as generators find the increased cost of disposal working against their profit margins." John L. McCormick, The Environmental Policy Institute, 16 April 1985.

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, DC, September 26, 1985.

Hon. BYRON L. DORGAN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. DORGAN: We are writing in response to your September 11, 1985 letter requesting information on the waste-end tax proposed by the Adminiistration as part of the funding mechanism for the Superfund reauthorization. The attachment contains answers to the questions you submitted regarding the Administration's waste-end tax. We trust this information adequately responds to your concerns.

We appreciate your support of the waste-end tax. In contrast to broad-based corporate taxes, a waste-end tax would be paid by the industries that generate the hazardous waste believed to be responsible for many of the existing Superfund sites. Thus, we share your view that a waste-end tax is an appropriate funding source for Superfund.

Thank you for your interest in the Administration's tax proposal. We appreciate the opportunity to respond to your inquiry and look forward to continuing to work with you on the reauthorization of Superfund.

Sincerely,

RONALD A. PEARLMAN,
Assistant Secretary (Tax Policy).

LOSS OF "POLLUTER PAYS" PRINCIPLE

HON. DENNY SMITH

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. DENNY SMITH. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the House approved an extension of the Superfund Program. My home State of Oregon is one of the most environmentally aware States in the Nation, and I had very much hoped to support the extension. It saddened me greatly to be unable to do so.

I was pleased to support the Superfund legislation which was approved by the House earlier in the session. That legislation offered a commonsense solution to the question of who should pay for Superfund. We said simply: "Those who make the mess, must pay to clean it up."

This "polluter pays" principle has been the guiding philosophy of Superfund since the program's inception. This House very wisely resisted numerous attempts to do away with the principle, and, instead, to substitute a new and radical value-added tax—the first step on the road to a national sales tax.

Unfortunately, the conference committee went against the will of the House, and presented us with an entirely new tax which never had the benefit of a hearing. By passing this landmark tax, we have violated the "polluter pays" principle. Now, many segments of our society will pay a high price.

Our environment will pay because Congress has removed an incentive for companies to stop polluting.

Our farmers and others will pay in higher fuel taxes.

American business will pay with the new tax—even if they have absolutely no connection with toxic wastes. Products of medicine will be treated just the same as producers of toxic sludge.

Consumers will pay because businesses will be forced to pass on their tax increase in the form of higher prices.

All Americans will pay, because Congress has now set the machinery in motion for a national value-added tax—in reality, a national sales tax. We are setting a very dangerous precedent with the imposition of such a tax. The new business tax can be raised with ease—and you better believe that the big spenders back here have never met a tax they didn't like—or hike.

Even though I could not support this radically new and unfair funding mechanism, I stand with other Members of Congress in urging the Superfund administrators to get their bureaucracy in shape, and to run a smooth and efficient cleanup program.

TRIBUTE TO GEORGE J. KOSANOVICH

HON. JOE KOLTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. KOLTER. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure for this opportunity to recognize George J. Kosanovich for his outstanding accomplishments and his dedication of many years to the armed services of the United States.

George Kosanovich was born May 14, 1920, as the only child to Mike and Eva Kosanovich, and he was graduated from Homer City High School, whereupon he attended Indiana State Teachers College. After having been inducted into the Army in 1942, George studied mechanical engineering.

George Kosanovich's exemplary behavior was first clearly demonstrated in his service in the Army. While in the Army, George Kosanovich rose to the position of a squad leader to the 120th Combat Engineers of the 29th Infantry. Because of his committed demeanor and natural leadership ability, George was quickly promoted to platoon sergeant. It didn't take long for his command to recognize that Sergeant Kosanovich was a natural born leader, capable of handling the responsibility of his men's lives.

George Kosanovich received several honorary medals while in active service during the war. For example, George never stood behind the lines in service of his country but instead, he was a direct participant in the D-day invasion. Sergeant Kosanovich was part of the first wave of Allies to hit Omaha Beach, attempting to secure a beachhead during the first crucial hour of the D-day invasion. Those first units sustained heavy losses and Sergeant Kosanovich's unit was not spared the cost as they sustained an 80-percent casualty rate. Sergeant Kosanovich himself received shrapnel wounds in action which necessitated his evacuation to a stateside hospital. It was through the gallant sacrifices of Sergeant Kosanovich and countless others that the Allies secured success.

On September 27, 1945, George was discharged from Thomas England Hospital and returned to the private sector. Until 1950, Mr. Kosanovich worked at the R&P Coal Co., he resigned to take a managerial position with Mr. Phillips Department Store in Indiana and served there until his retirement in 1971, but Sergeant Kosanovich's involvement with the military did not end in 1945, because he is dedicated to the men who have served in the defense of our Nation. You see, Mr. Kosanovich is known as the watchdog for veterans. He is affectionately described as a man who has lived, breathed, and will die Mr. V.F.W.

George Kosanovich is a life V.F.W. and a life American Legion member. In the veterans organization, George Kosanovich held many offices as well as received many awards for his committed service to the V.F.W. In 1964, George was named chairman of the Pennsylvania V.F.W. State Golf Committee. He has held post, district, and State level V.F.W. offices. In 1972–73, he was named All State Post Commander by the State of Pennsylvania. In 1972 through 1975, he held the position of the commander of the Indiana City United Veterans Organization. In 1973 George was named Veteran of the Year for his outstanding service to Indiana County veterans. Also in 1973, George was named State membership director, and has received National Aide to Camps appointments for the past 14 years. George Kosanovich served as secretary to the United Veterans War Council. For over 20 years he has been a member of the Disabled American Veterans Voiture No. 798, and is a member of the Military Order of the Purple Heart.

George J. Kosanovich also is a family man, being married to the former Helen Harris, and is the father of two daughters, Debra Lynn Funnel and Reverend Cathy Higgins. As you can see, George Kosanovich is an active community participant of may years. Not only is he active in veterans' affairs, but he is also involved in social and fraternal organizations.

THOMAS B. McGUIRE, JR. DAY

HON. H. JAMES SAXTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, as the Representative from the 13th District of the Great State of New Jersey, and on behalf of the Honorable James Courter, I am proud to commend the Honorable Thomas H. Kean, Governor of New Jersey, for proclaiming November 7, 1986, Thomas B. McGuire, Jr., Day.

Maj. Tommy McGuire was born in Ridgewood, NJ, and received a college education at the Georgia Institute of Technology. In 1941, when he was in his third year at the Georgia Tech, Maj. Tommy McGuire left school to volunteer his service in the U.S. Army Air Corps as an aviation cadet.

On January 7, 1945, during a hectic dogfight over Los Negros in the Philippines, Maj. Tommy McGuire attempted to save a fellow pilot under attack by a Japanese fighter by consciously maneuvering his P-38 Lightning into an untenable position at an extremely low altitude. This caused his P-38 to snap roll, plunging him inverted into the ground. He was pronounced missing in action.

Maj. Tommy McGuire's was credited with 38 aerial combat victories, making him the second highest American ace of World War II. He also received the Distinguished Service Cross, 3 Silver Stars, 6 Distinguished Flying Crosses, and 15 Air Medals. In addition, Gen. George C. Kenny, 5th Air Force, Pacific Theatre, said of him, "His loss was one of the worst blows I took in the whole war." Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower awarded Maj. Tommy McGuire the Medal of Honor—posthumously.

On September 17, 1949, McGuire Air Force Base was named in honor of the late Maj. Thomas B. McGuire, Jr. As New Jersey's only Air Force base, and known as the "Gateway to NATO", it serves as the Headquarters for the 21st Air Force, Military Airlift Command, the 438th Military Airlift Wing, and the Military Airlift Command NCO Academy East. It is also the headquarters for the New Jersey Air National Guard, its two flying units the 108th Tactical Fighter Wing and the 170th Air Refueling Group; the 514th Military Airlift Wing; and the USAF Reserve.

With historical heritage dating back to the American Revolution, New Jersey continues in that tradition through voluntary contributions of money and manpower from every corner of the State. Private citizens, veterans groups, the civilian business and industrial sector, organized labor, religious and fraternal organizations and others, are all intent on perpetuating the spirit of patriotism in our Nation by constructing a special memorial and tribute to this New Jersey wartime hero, Maj. Thomas B. McGuire, Jr.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. COURTER and I endorse Maj. Thomas B. McGuire, Jr., Day, as proclaimed by the Honorable Thomas H. Kean, Governor and commander in chief of the Militia Forces of the Great State of New Jersey.

BISHOP CONNARE MARKS 50TH YEAR IN PRIESTHOOD

HON. JOHN P. MURTHA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I want to take a moment to make special recognition of some milestones passed recently by Bishop William G. Connare of the Catholic diocese of Greenbury, PA.

On May 8, 1985, Bishop Connare marked his silver anniversary as bishop of the 224,000 Catholics in the countries of Westmoreland, Fayette, Armstrong, and Indiana. On June 15, a special mass was celebrated in the basilica of St. Vincent Archabbey marking the anniversary of the 50th year of his ordination to the priesthood. And it has also been announced that later this year Bishop Connare will be retiring.

Bishop Connare has throughtout those years been a church leader at the local, diocesan, national, and international levels. Moreover, he has been an integral part of the lives of all the residents of the area as a community leader.

Think for a moment about all the change and turmoil that has occurred in our world and in western Pennsylvania over the 26 years he has led the Greensburg diocese. His spiritual leadership during times of assassination, of unemployment, of natural disaster, of local and national tragedy, of spiritual and family crisis has helped the lives of thousands of families to survive and to presevere whatever the hardship, task, or burden.

While we in Government have talked a great deal over the past few years about the strength and rejuvenation of the American family, reflect for a moment on how much the families in our area have benefited over the years at times of celebration, loss, or crisis from the leadership of Bishop Connare.

Our greatest strength as a nation comes from the individual caring and concern which our citizens express for one another. Bishop Connare's life has been, and will continue to be, a monument to that American strength and what is finest about our communities and our Nation.

Put quite simply: we have all had our lives enriched within the Greensbury diocese, within Pennsylvania, and within America through the friendship, leadership, hard work, and dedication of Bishop William G. Connare.

THE 50TH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY OF GENE AND CLARA HARRAH

HON. LEON E. PANETTA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I inform my colleagues of the 50th wedding anniverary of a wonderful couple, Gene and Clara Harrah, of the Monterey Peninsula in California.

Gene and Clara Harrah are not only a couple that has made great contributions to the Monterey Peninsula but they are also close and longtime friends of mine. They will be celebrating their anniversary this New Year's Eve, and their daughters are organizing a marvelous tribute to them from their many friends. This statement will be a part of that tribute.

Gene is a native Californian, having been born in the Los Angeles area. Clara is almost a native Californian. She was born in Minnesota, but her family moved to the Los Angeles area when she was 3 years old. They met in 1930 at the restaurant run by Clara's brother and sister-in-law, and in 1936, on New Year's Eve, they were married.

Gene had the good fortune to be stationed at Fort Ord when he served in the Army, and, inevitably, he and Clara fell in love with the area. They never left, and we who also have the good fortune to reside on the Monterey Peninsula are all the more lucky for that fact.

Gene practiced law in the Monterey area for 20 years after leaving the Army. My father was among his clients. Then, Gene was appointed to the municipal bench, where he has served with distinction. Clara is noted as a fine hostess, and her culinary skills have pleased the palate of family and friends alike.

Gene and Clara have two lovely daughters, Shirley and Jean, both of whom still reside in California.

Mr. Speaker, Gene and Clara Harrah have lived a rich life and have now shared half a century together. I think their marriage is a tribute to their quality as human beings and serves as an inspiration to all of us. I count myself fortunate to have them as friends, and I know my colleagues join me in wishing them good health and fortunate for many years to come.

DISINFORMATION: MOSCOW'S ORWELLIAN DISTORTION

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the Soviet Union's interference in the freedom of expression extends far beyond its own borders. The unwarranted seizure or expulsion of foreign correspondents, illustrated most recently in the Daniloff case, is fairly common by Moscow's standards, and the Soviet press is known to be nothing more than a mouthpiece for the Communist government. However, Soviet infringement on freedom of information and opinion has a lesser known, more sinister side. The Soviet Union is engaged in a large-scale effort to manipulate foreign audiences through disinformation. In an Orwellian distortion of truth and fabrication, the Soviets use forgeries and agents of influence to disinform unwitting foreign journalists and audiences under a KGB-administered program they call activnyye meropriyatiya, the Russian term for active measures.

Good journalism relies on verifiable information from confirmed sources. In recognition of this, the U.S. Government has sought closer cooperation with the press. Though in the past the United States gave a blanket no comment to leaked documents, efforts are now under way to combat Soviet active measures. An interagency working group, formed by order of President Reagan, is actively seeking and exposing Soviet disinformation.

Identifying Soviet active measures, a practice once considered antidetente or red-baiting, is necessary in today's world as the Soviets attempt to present a new, disingenuous public image. Realizing that their own newspapers have little credibility in the East or the West, the Soviets attempt to influence the readership or foreign newspapers with their fabrications.

Several examples or Soviet active measures have been indentified and traced to Moscow. The hand of the KGB has been found in faked documents regarding the Korean Airliner shot down by Soviet fighters in 1983 and in forged United States diplomatic cables concerning international efforts to investigate Bulgarian involvement in the attempted assassination of Pope John Paul II. Forged letters and diplomatic cables have been issued by Soviet agents under the names of United States officials ranging from President Reagan to Herbert Romerstein, the United States Information Agency's specialist on Soviet active measures.

In an attempt to add credibility to these forgeries, Soviet Embassies abroad collect official United States letterheads and documents, which in turn are inscribed with fabricated messages and given to gullible foreign publications. Forged documents, identified at a rate of about 25 per year, are occasionally mailed or leaked to Western news agencies, and even more often to the Third World press, in an attempt to manipulate world opinion. Some of these forgeries are easily identifiable, largely because of the Soviets' inability to duplicate perfectly English grammar, idioms, spelling, or bureaucratic jargon.

When a British Intelligence Officer, Kim Philby, defected to Moscow in 1963, he significantly raised the quality of Soviet disinformation. Philby proofread major forgeries and corrected the stilted grammar and misspellings that make such documents more easily identifiable. In this connection, the recent defection to Moscow of a former American Intelligence Operative, Edward Howard, must be viewed with consternation by specialists in detecting documents forged by the KGB. A person familiar, as he is, with the inner working of the United States Government, could enhance substantially the believability of Soviet disinformation.

President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative [SDI] is the latest target for Soviet active measures. The Soviets have embarked on a campaign to discredit President Reagan and SDI with fabrications and misinterpretations, aimed in particular at our Western Allies. The current debate in the West between the proponents and opponents of SDI is a valuable process that is characteristic of democracy. Citizens of free countries are voicing their opinions publicly, unhindered by the apparatus of a police state. After drawnout public debate, the ultimate decision will most likely be reflected at the ballot box by the honest and open electoral process that Western democracies guarantee their citizens. Unfortunately, there is a third party, hiding in the shadows, hoping to undermine these democracies for their own interests through subversion and fabrication. This third party is, of course, the Soviet Union.

HOSTAGES IN BEIRUT: YOU ARE NOT FORGOTTEN

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, Americans everywhere are overjoyed that Nicholas Daniloff is back home in the United States safe and unharmed. After more than 2 weeks of negotiations by Secretary of State Shultz, administration patience paid off, and now President Reagan and Chairman Gorbachev will meet in Reykjavik, Iceland, to discuss arms control, human rights, and regional issues. The Daniloff affair severely strained relations between the Soviet Union and the United States. Now let's hope we are back on a responsible diplomatic course.

But as our eyes turn to Iceland, we must not forget our American hostages in Beirut, including Terry Anderson and David Jacobsen. These two men were taken hostage 18 months ago by the Islamic Jihad and have been held in captivity ever since without any indication from their kidnapers that they will soon be released.

Terry Anderson, 38, in a videotape appeal said, "It hurts to see the propaganda and bombast with which the administration solved the problem of Mr. Daniloff, a citizen like us who was imprisoned for only a short time." Mr. Anderson questioned how any official could justify the interest, attention, and action given in the Daniloff case and the relative inattention paid him and David Jacobsen.

On the same videotape, in a message directed at President Reagan on behalf of all five American hostages in Lebanon, David Jacobsen asked: "Don't we also deserve the same attention and protection given Nicholas Daniloff?"

I think they do. In a letter to Secretary of State Shultz on October 6, I urged the administration to pursue negotiations with the Syrian Government over the release of our Beirut captives. Secretary Shultz has expressed his willingness to discuss with anyone the situation of our hostages in Lebanon. He raised this issue with Syrian Foreign Minister Farouk al Sharaa and it is reported that the Syrian Government is committed to doing what it can to gain the release of our hostages. These leads must be followed.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes stated, "If those who are holding the hostages would step forward for discussion, that might move the process forward." This remark signals a shift in emphasis in the administration's policy, which rejects any negotiations over the kidnapers' demands for the release of 17 Shiite terrorists who are jailed in Kuwait.

Mr. Speaker, the administration should note the offer of Peggy Say, sister of kidnaped U.S. journalist Terry Anderson, to come to Beirut to negotiate his release. These are her words: "Tell me who you are willing to talk to about Terry's freedom and the freedom of the other American hostages. Please name the person you would be willing to negotiate with. I will ask that person to meet with you."

Peggy Say is a courageous woman whose voice the administration should heed. It must determine who is holding our hostages in Beirut and press them for their release. The American people will support the President and the Secretary of State in this endeavor.

TRIBUTE TO HENRY RIZZO

HON. ALAN WHEAT

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday the local chapter of the Sons of Columbus, a civic organization in Missouri's Fifth Congressional District, will honor the recipient of its annual Columbian of the Year Award. The Sons of Columbus chapter was organized in 1964 to promote the image of Italian Americans in Kansas City by encouraging its members to share the strengths of their community with the larger community of Kansas City.

The Sons of Columbus remind us that our Nation has an old and proud heritage. They encourage each of us to live up to the hopes and dreams of the explorers who sought a better world and discovered a new world. Each year, the Sons of Columbus honor a member of their community who has lived up to these ideals and succeeded in his or her commitment to improving the community and the city.

Mr. Henry Rizzo, a friend, a neighbor, and an outstanding public servant, deserves to receive this prestigious award this year. In one of Kansas City's proudest communities, Henry Rizzo stands out as an example of what is best in our Nation. The honor bestowed by the Sons of Columbus to Henry Rizzo deserves recognition.

As a young man with a great future, Henry Rizzo has earned this award and our respect. His service to his community began with his involvement in his parish church, the Holy Rosary Catholic Church. Since then, his concern for his community, his city and his State typify the goals and aims of the Sons of Columbus.

As Henry grew, his concern for his community broadened. Graduating from DeLasalle High School, Henry attended Central Missouri State University. Studying business administration, Henry's understanding of the small businesses in his neighborhood and the needs and concerns of his neighbors grew and matured.

Now, Henry Rizzo shares his understanding with the State of Missouri as an elected official representing his family, his business, and his community in Jefferson City.

Mr. Speaker, Henry Rizzo is not driven by a desire for personal recognition but by a genuine concern for the needs of people. It is fitting that his tireless dedication to his community is being formally acknowledged. I want to congratulate Henry Rizzo on his award and ask my colleagues to join me in a salute to this outstanding public servant.

TRIBUTE TO REPRESENTATIVE JOHN F. SEIBERLING

HON. PARREN J. MITCHELL

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 8, 1986

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to join the other Members of this body in a salute to my good friend and colleague JOHN SEIBERLING. JOHN and I came to Congress together in 1971, and I can say without hesitation, that the 14th District of Ohio will have trouble replacing this individual who has unselfishly devoted that last 16 years to his constituents in Akron.

We all know JOHN as a man of conviction, a man with a conscience. His creative leadership on environmental issues, and legislation to preserve our Nation's natural and historic heritage, has led him to receive numerous awards from various environmental groups over the years. His interests are not confined to the environment however, along with being floor manager for antitrust legislation and being an active member of the Arms Control and Foreign Policy Caucus, during those tumultuous years when our men fought in Vietnam, JOHN led the fight in Congress to bring about a complete U.S. military withdrawal from Vietnam.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the 14th Congressional District of Ohio will miss JOHN SEIBERLING very much, and this House, and indeed the Nation, will suffer from his absence in the Congress. I know that JOHN wants to get back home and spend more time with his family and enjoy the fruits of his labor on behalf of the scenic Cuyahoga Valley, but I know that he will continue in some special way to make significant contributions to this country and to its esthetic beauty which he has fought so hard to preserve.

CHOKING ON THE ARMY'S FOOD CONTRACT

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, the Washington Post reports today that the Army has granted a $139,000 contract to the University of Maryland to conduct a study of how to prepare healthy food that tastes good. I submit that the Army asking a college food service about healthy, tasty food is rather like Phyllis Diller asking Joan Rivers about beauty aids. There isn't much expertise on either side.

What the Army is expert at is spending a lot of money on some pretty worthless projects. It resists spending money to test the Bradley fighting vehicle to make sure it won't blow up or sink with soldiers inside, but it will fritter away a pretty good chunk of money to determine whether breaded veal parmigiana and lumpy mashed potatoes taste better with a little less salt in them. When I was in college and the Air Force, all the food looked and tasted alike, anyway, and we buried it all in catsup to make it edible.

If we want to conduct a taste test, I'm sure we could do it for a lot less than $139,000. And if we want to know more about the culinary preferences of soldiers, why not run this test in Army mess halls instead of the ivory towers of the University of Maryland? All we would have to do is look in the garbage cans at the end of the cafeteria lines to know what our soldiers prefer. In the end, the Army will still have to run a massive disinformation campaign to convince its soldiers that its food is going to be any better. I hope it doesn't cause any spokemen to resign.

Mr. Speaker, we are told that the way to a man's heart is through his stomach. We are also told that an Army travels on its stomach. But the Pentagon seems to think that the way to anyone's heart is through his pocketbook. It seems to think that if it can give out enough pork barrel contracts and sweetheart deals that it can buy public support for the massive defense buildup. I don't buy it. Secretary Weinberger loses a lot of credibility when he claims that the House has cut defense to the bone and unilaterally disarmed the United States and then somehow finds $139,000 for this. Credibility is in short supply in the administration right now. This doesn't help their position.

DUE PROCESS RIGHTS MUST BE PROTECTED FOR SAVINGS & LOANS

HON. THOMAS J. MANTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. MANTON. Mr. Speaker, the events of the last 10 days relative to the FSLIC bailout legislation have served to focus attention upon the regulatory nightmares that have befallen many and continue to face countless of our Nation's savings and loans. As Majority Leader JIM WRIGHT has attempted to make clear to the Federal Loan Bank Board, all too often Federal regulators have failed to work in a constructive manner with our savings institutions, relying instead upon extreme measures—such as placing institutions into receivership—without exploring other available measures such as the infusion of capital and loan restructuring to protect the integrity of the institution and assure the safety of depositor's funds. The problems that have recently plagued certain sectors of the economy and particular areas of the country have indeed promoted Federal regulators to examine the loan portfolios of many of our banks and savings and loans, and we all recognize the need for such vigilance to protect the savings of our citizens.

Mr. Speaker, a disturbing facet of this situation has been illustrated by a recent Federal court ruling construing the rights of an association after Federal regulators have placed the institution in receivership. More accurately, this ruling illustrates a construction of the statute which declares that the association has virtually no right to question the determinations and decisions of Federal regulators.

In Guaranty Savings & Loan Association v. Federal Home Loan Bank Board, 794 F.2d 1339, the 8th Circuit Court of Appeals held on July 9, that after the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corporation ["FSLIC"] takes over a savings and loan association as receiver, the subsequent judicial proceeding under 12 U.S.C. § 1464(d)(6)(A) is not a full trial de novo but instead a very narrow one restricted to the administrative record upon which the Federal Home Loan Bank Board (the "Board") originally acted.

The key provision of the statute provides: In the event * * * [a receiver is appointed], the association may, within thirty days thereafter, bring an action in the U.S. district court for the judicial district in which the home office of such association is located * * * for an order requiring the Board to remove such * * * receiver, and the court shall upon the merits dismiss such action or direct the Board to remove such * * * receiver. [Emphasis added.]

Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that when Congress used the phrase, "upon the merits", it intended a complete, full and fair hearing before a Federal district court, not limited to the record which the Board had chosen to rely upon in taking over the savings and loan association. Without such a full hearing, the association is never accorded due process.

Let us look at what actually occurs in these cases. The Board determines that a receivership is called for, appoints FSLIC as receiver and, in the case of a State-chartered FSLIC-insured institution, obtains the concurrence of the appropriate State official that grounds for the receivership exist. After the appropriate State official concurs in the Board's determination, FSLIC's appointment as receiver takes effect and FSLIC takes over the subject association without any prior notice of any kind. There is good reason for this. First, the Board may have to act in an emergency situation—for example, where there is a run on the association. Second, if it acted with notice, there might be a sudden dissipation of assets or a concealment of records. Thus, Congress clearly intended that the Board would have authority to move quickly in these situations and without affording the association an opportunity to challenge the basis for the Board's determination.

As a result of this procedure, however, the record establishing the grounds for the appointment is one assembled by the Board, giving the Board the opportunity to pick and choose among the documents in its possession those that will establish the grounds, such as insolvency, that will support the appointment. The association, on the other hand, does not have access to all, if any, of its records to prove that the Board acted improperly, without an adequate basis, or against the record as a whole.

Both because of this basic inequity, and also because the association obviously must have its day in court and a due process hearing, Congress provided for a judicial proceeding "upon the merits" to determine what the true facts are, on a complete and full record. To hold, as the eighth circuit did, that the only hearing to which the association is entitled is one limited to the record which the Board chose to compile as a basis for its own emergency action is not only directly contrary to Congress' intent but a denial of the association's due process rights. This is a particularly egregious situation in view of the fact that the Board hearing is nonpublic and ex parte.

On a complete record, for example, the association might be able to show that the Board was in error and that substantial assets which were neglected or overlooked by the Board made the association solvent. Or it might show that the Board acted for wholly improper reasons. The point is that only by the development of a full record, and a decision by a court on all the facts, can the Board be properly challenged in regard to what is, after all, a drastic action: The sudden, virtually unimpeachable takeover of a private business.

It is my understanding that the 8th Circuit interpretation is being challenged by the parties, and I would hope that whatever other court review is available would focus upon the true congressional intent rather than giving a cramped interpretation of this important statutory language.

LEGISLATION TO SUSPEND YUGOSLAVIA'S MFN STATUS

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, today we have the opportunity to issue a strong statement on the persecution of American citizens travelling in communist countries. Mr. Pjeter Ivezaj, a U.S. citizen from the Detroit area, has been sentenced by Yugoslav authorities to 7 years in prison for peacefully demonstrating near the Yugoslav Embassy here in Washington 5 years ago. In addition, two other naturalized Americans from Yugoslavia have been arrested in the past month and are being held in Yugoslavia with no charges specified.

This outrageous treatment of American citizens cannot continue. Although these cases have not received nearly the same media coverage as that of the Daniloff case, the injustice that they are suffering is certainly no less than that experienced by Mr. Daniloff. Any country, Communist or non-Communist, that violates the generally accepted principles governing the treatment of foreigners must be dealt with harshly and quickly. To do otherwise, will ensure that an increasing number of Americans will await a similar fate at the hands of repressive Communist governments.

The time for a negotiated settlement in the case of these three Americans is rapidly coming to an end. The time for action is at hand. For this reason, I join with Representative Broomfield and several of our distinguished colleagues on the Foreign Affairs Committee in introducing legislation that would suspend Yugoslavia's most favored nation [MFN] trading status until such time that the President certifies that there are no Americans being illegally detained in Yugoslavia. At the present time, Yugoslavia is one of the few Communist countries that enjoys our preferential MFN trading status.

To permit the Government of Yugoslavia to violate the rights of American citizens, and then at the same time, to grant them preferential trading status is ludicrous. If they insist on illegally imprisoning our citizens, then the least we can do is to stop bailing out their economy.

In an effort to free our captive Americans, I would also urge the administration to apply economic pressure on the Government of Yugoslavia. For instance, the President has the power to ban future Eximbank loans and other foreign assistance to Yugoslavia. If Yugoslavia is going to act with total disrespect for the rights of American citizens, then they should have to suffer the consequences of our retaliation.

Congress must take immediate action on this legislation, or else we will in effect be sealing the fate of these three Americans. I, for one do not want to go into the holiday season knowing that these U.S. citizens are paying the price for our inaction. Through a unified and concerted effort we were able to secure the release of Nicholas Daniloff. Let's apply the same pressure against Yugoslavia and unite these men with their families. I urge your support of our effort.

CONGRATULATIONS TO BETTY BUTLER

HON. MANUEL LUJAN, JR.

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. LUJAN. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of myself and other members of the New Mexico delegation, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the outstanding work of one of our constituents who is doing something constructive about a serious problem.

In a relatively short period of time we, as a nation, have become painfully aware of terms such as abused, missing, runaway, throwaway, latch-key, exploited children, as well as of teenage drug addiction. It seems there is a daily account in our newspapers of a child being misused or in trouble in some way. It is a national tragedy which will require a herculean effort to rectify.

Betty Butler, herself a mother of seven, founded a program in 1982 which she calls "Identi-Find-A-Child/Safety Smart" program. The program originally was designed to provide fingerprinting, dental identification, educational and outreach awareness to children, parents, teachers, and communities throughout the State of New Mexico. With the help of "thumbs-up" puppets she designed and her Safety Smart series of educational booklets, Mrs. Butler conducts seminars in the school system for the very young children teaching them to take responsibility for their own safety. The children interact with the puppets and are educated in a nonthreatening manner.

The program has grown to encompass older children and Mrs. Butler brings seminars to children from kindergarten through the 12th grade on a grade/age level. Older students learn safety covers everything in their environment which can be harmful to them such as drugs, alcohol, and even giving in to peer pressure.

Over the past 4 years, Mrs. Butler has given numerous workshops and trained over 750 volunteers. She has received recognition for her work from the President, from the Governor of New Mexico, many city mayors, the New Mexico State School Superintendent, the New Mexico PTA, the National Volunteer Action Center, and is listed as a referral source in "Action", the Department of Justice Child Safety Booklet.

Now, on October 19, Mrs. Butler will receive the Award of Honor from the National Safety Council.

We would like to congratulate Mrs. Butler and to commend her for her dedication and hard work.

LEGISLATION TO AMEND THE BANKRUPTCY CODE

HON. JOHN F. SEIBERLING

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, on July 17, the LTV Corp. filed for protection under chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code. At the same time, LTV notified more than 60,000 retirees that it would no longer pay the company's share of their health and life insurance benefits.

After a firestorm of adverse publicity, LTV reversed itself, and asked for permission from the bankruptcy court to restore health and life insurance coverage to its retirees. The company's unwise and legally dubious decision to unilaterally abrogate its obligations to pay for retiree benefits covered under a collective bargaining agreement has prompted the Congress to take a long, hard look at the protections under the Bankruptcy Code accorded to employees of a bankrupt company.

Terrible though the impact of the demise of a major corporation may be on its present employees, they at least are entitled to unemployment compensation, whatever Federal supplemental compensation may be in effect at the time, and job training. Unless the employees are near retirement age, they also have at least a hope of reentering the workforce.

The same cannnot be said for those who have retired before the bankruptcy. Retirees depend, often entirely, on whatever pension and insurance benefits they have earned during their career. It is wholly unreasonable to take away a retiree's pension and insurance and then expect him to go back to work—if he is employable at all—in order to make ends meet. Retirees health insurance, pension benefits, and life insurance ought to be unassailable. But as the LTV experience so bitterly points out, those benefits may indeed be lost.

With that in mind, I am today introducing legislation to establish a new fifth priority under section 507(a) of title 11 for the unsecured claims of retired former employees for any health insurance plan, employee pension plan, or employee life insurance plan, subject to certain limits. Pension claims would be limited to $90,000 per each retired former employee less the benefits paid to such employee under ERISA. Life insurance would be limited to that which provides $10,000 in death benefits for each retired former employee.

Mr. Speaker, the mere establishment of a priority claim does not necessarily mean that sufficient assets will exist to fully satisfy the claim. But enactment of my bill would at least provide one small layer of protection for retirees, who have worked for their retirement benefits and find themselves without them.

HON. DAVID DREIER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, it appears certain that the House will not bring up for consideration H.R. 4300, the Parental and Medical Leave Act, before Congress adjourns. However, I am dismayed over recent rumors that suggest a renewed effort next year to enact similar legislation. For this reason, I want to make clear my opposition to H.R. 4300, and pledge my commitment to fight any future legislation to implement a federally mandated uniform leave policy.

While H.R. 4300 has been lauded by its supporters as "pro-family" legislation, I fear it as I do the "wolf disguised in sheep's clothing." Labeling H.R. 4300 as a pro-family bill is totally misleading.

Certainly the issues of child-care and parental leave demand our attention as more women enter the workforce. No one denies that employment demographics are changing and that society must adapt to meet the needs of men and women who seek better ways to mix work at home and in the market. While this change is often stressful, legislation like this is not the answer.

A national "family policy" which purports to reconcile women's new roles as both mothers and breadwinners does not necessarily make a family happier or more well-adjusted. H.R. 4300 is a pandora's box, not a panacea for the tough choices that many Americans are now making for themselves and their children.

I am concerned about the potential impact H.R. 4300 will have on the American family through the business community. I fear this legislation will inadvertantly fuel job discrimination by inhibiting employment of "family-oriented" men and women. In addition, imposing federally mandated leave policies discourages the creation of new jobs and penalizes small businesses who employ over 70 percent of the work force.

According to a survey by the National Federation of Independent Business [NFIB], about one-third of small firms do not offer any health insurance to their employees because they cannot afford it. Requiring these small firms to provide additional benefits will exacerbate the problem, making it even more difficult for small businesses operating on slim profit margins to stay in business.

Simply mandating a benefit does not increase the total benefits package available to employees. Any additional benefit required reduces or eliminates some other equally attractive benefit, thus destroying the flexibility employers and employees need to meet individual needs.

Businesses are as individual as the employees that work for them. Each operates under different seasonal, social, and economic demands. In light of these differences, a uniform national standard on parental leave and childcare is not practical. I believe these issues can be more effectively addressed at the private sector level where flexibility is maintained, enabling employers and employees to determine the benefits that best meet their needs.

The small business community is so concerned about uniform paid leave legislation that it categorically rejected H.R. 4300 and other national mandated employee benefit proposals during the White House conference on small business. In fact, only liability insurance crisis was considered a higher priority to the conference delegates. As a member of the House Small Business Committee, I've found the concerns of the small business community to be totally justified.

H.R. 4300 is well-intentioned legislation, but it will lead to unforeseen consequences for businesses and more important, the American family. I am pleased that H.R. 4300 will not be considered this year, and plan to oppose any future attempt to resurrect legislation mandating employee benefits in the future.

A GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY OF SERVICE

HON. SANDER M. LEVIN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to the officers and members of the Ferndale Chamber of Commerce. Originally organized as the "Ferndale Boosters" in 1916, they were officially chartered in 1936 and are presently observing their 50th anniversary.

This group of business people work, not only to promote business and industry in their community, but to maintain the unity and concern that exists in their city. They demonstrated a continuing interest in the welfare of all the residents of Ferndale by their active promotion and participation in many of the programs sponsored by the service organizations in the community.

I congratulate this organization for its history of dedicated service and the promotion of the spirit of free enterprise, and I extend every good wish for their continued success.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. ROBERT A. BORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. BORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent on October 9 when the House of Representatives considered the conference report on H.R. 2005, the Superfund reauthorization bill. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye."

As a member of the Public Works Committee and as a strong supporter of the Superfund bill, I would like to commend the chairman of the Subcommittee on Water Resources, Mr. ROE, and the chairman of the Energy and Commerce Subcommittee on Commerce, Mr. FLORIO, for their outstanding leadership in developing a fair and balanced bill that addresses the Nation's hazardous waste cleanup crisis.

After more than 2 years of deliberation and negotiation, the House has finally reached agreement on a greatly expanded Superfund Program. The conference agreement provides $9 billion over the next 5 years to cleanup the Nation's worst abandoned hazardous waste sites and uncontrolled leaking underground storage tanks. It establishes ambitious cleanup schedules and stringent cleanup standards, as well as increased penalties for violators of the Superfund law.

I am particularly pleased that the conference agreement contains a meaningful community right-to-know program that will enable the public and emergency personnel to obtain detailed information about chemical threats that may exist in their communities. When H.R. 2005 was considered by the Public Works Committee, I was involved in efforts to include language which ensures that communities would be prepared in case of accidents and provides citizens with information on the routine release of chemicals in their neighborhoods which may pose long-term health threats.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the agreement approved by the House on October 9 establishes a stronger Superfund Program that has the resources and the mandate to protect the health and safety of the American people. I urge prompt approval by the President of this landmark committment to a cleaner environment.

TRIBUTE TO JIMMY B. CLARK

HON. JULIAN C. DIXON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, it is my deep pleasure to bring to the attention of my colleagues the accomplishments of my friend, Mr. Jimmy B. Clark of Los Angeles, CA, on the occasion of his retirement from local 47 of the American Federation of Musicians.

For 30 years Clark has worked to promote the professional interests of musicians. During his tenure he worked, ably and effectively, to improve musician's wages and working conditions. Clark, himself a talented musician, has played in musical groups since his boyhood in South Bend, IN—through high school and college, in jazz and military bands, in Chicago and New York, and with the greats, among them Duke Ellington.

Aside from his great love of music and service to the music world, Clark dedicated his career in a more general sense to service to others. He is a charter member of the Hollywood branch of the NAACP, and has served there as chairman of the Labor Industry Committee. He is a member of the Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity, and recently was recognized for his 50-year membership. He currently serves as a member of the board of directors of Save Our California Kids (SOCK) of the California Youth Authority. Clark has made his contributions felt in many areas, and in doing so, touched many lives.

At the close of this fruitful career, it gives me great pleasure to join with Jimmy's family, friends, and coworkers in wishing him well.

TRIBUTE TO JOYCE KILMER

HON. BERNARD J. DWYER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. DWYER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to bring to the attention of my colleagues the centennial anniversary of the birth of one of America's most treasured poets, Joyce Kilmer. This gifted writer was born December 6, 1886, in New Brunswick, NJ, part of the Sixth Congressional District which I am honored to represent.

The City of New Brunswick and the State of New Jersey have shown their gratitude for the many accomplishments and contributions to our literary heritage made by Joyce Kilmer, who was killed in France as a soldier in the First World War. His untimely but heroic death on the battlefield in 1918 was a great and tragic loss, yet even at such a young age, he left behind him a body of work that will endure forever.

Among the many memorials to Joyce Kilmer is a street bearing his name in the city of New Brunswick, and Camp Kilmer, which was dedicated in his honor in 1942 during the Second World War. He is celebrated throughout the Nation with parks, forests, and clubs, all in recognition of his valor and unique literary talents.

Joyce Kilmer attended Rutgers College and was graduated from Columbia University in 1908. He taught Latin in New Jersey, wrote extensively for magazines, and in 1913 was appointed to the staff of the New York Times Sunday Magazine Section and Review of Books.

Several volumes of Kilmer's poems have been published and stand as a compelling testament to his talent and insight. His poems have deeply enriched our literature, and it is most fitting that as we approach the centennial year of his birth, we pause and pay tribute to the man and his work.

PAY EQUITY

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which will permit members of the U.S. Park Police and the U.S. Secret Service Uniformed Division to receive premium pay in the same manner as other employees of the Federal Government. My bill would no longer exclude the Park Police or the Secret Service Uniformed Division from coverage of that portion of title 5 of the U.S. Code.

Prior to the full implementation of the District of Columbia Home Rule Act (Public Law 93-198) in 1975, the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia, the U.S. Park Police and the Executive Protective Service were all considered to be Federal agencies under the control of the Congress, which had direct responsibility for compensation for all three law enforcement agencies. Since the implementation of home rule, the District of Columbia is no longer considered a Federal agency for purposes of employee compensation. The Council of the District of Columbia enacted the Comprehensive Merit Personnel Act, which permits employees of the D.C. government, including the Metropolitan Police Department, to bargain collectively for wages and other forms of compensation. However, the U.S. Park Police and the Executive Protective Service—now called the U.S. Secret Service Uniformed Division—were not covered by the Comprehensive Merit Personnel Act, and were not employees of the District of Columbia.

Congress enacted legislation in 1976 for the U.S. Park Police, and in 1980 for the U.S. Secret Service Uniformed Division, which required that basic pay for those two entities be set by Congress. This legislation, coupled with the impact of the Home Rule Act and the D.C. Comprehensive Merit Personnel Act, thereby severed the common origins of the Metropolitan Police, the Park Police and the Secret Service Uniformed Division. It created an anomaly whereby members of the Park Police and the Secret Service Uniformed Division, who are clearly Federal employees, are excluded from the definition of "employee" for purposes of entitlement to premium pay under title 5 of the U.S. Code. Such premium pay had previously been granted by the Congress through special provisions of the District of Columbia Code, which no longer applies to them. Thus, the U.S. Park Police and the Secret Service Uniformed Division, are the only Federal employees who are not eligible for any premium pay, because they no longer fall within the provisions of the D.C. Code, which provides for collective bargaining of wages, and they are specifically excluded from the applicable provisions of title 5, U.S. Code.

The legislation I am introducing today provides an easy resolution of this inequity. It requires only a minor modification to title 5 of the U.S. Code to correct what appears to have been an oversight. There is no conceivable reason that we should distinguish employees of these two Federal law enforcement agencies from other Federal employees with regard to eligibility for premium pay for overtime, night work, standby duty, Sunday and holiday work, and hazardous duty. It is only through a quirk of history that these employees are now excluded from both the Federal premium pay laws and from the D.C. Code which authorizes collective bargaining for premium pay.

It is essential that we treat these valued employees of the U.S. Park Police and the Secret Service Uniformed Division equitably and provide them with premium pay in the same manner as other Federal employees.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

THE SIXTH-GRADE WINNERS, HEALTHY MIND—HEALTHY BODY—NO DRUGS CONTEST

HON. WILLIAM F. GOODLING

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, nine schools in my district participated in the "Healthy Mind—Healthy Body—No Drugs" contest this year. The sixth-grade contestants each wrote 50 words on "What I Would Do If Offered Drugs" and "As A Good Citizen, How I Can Help My Community."

The overall winner of the local contest, Christine Butczynski from Carlisle, has had her entry submitted in the national contest. As you are aware, the final winner will receive national recognition and be invited to visit Congress, the White House, and participate in the week-long 1987 Cherry Blossom Festival.

Tremendous efforts are being made at all levels of government and in the private sector to fight this war against drugs. From reading the essays of Christine and her first four runners-up, it is encouraging to see that our youngsters are aware of the detrimental effects of drugs and are willing to do something about it. The enthusiasm among these sixth-grade students in assisting in our battle against drug abuse is remarkable, as you will see when you read their essays, which are printed below.

CHRISTINE BUTCZYNSKI

I would say NO and walk away. I would tell a responsible adult what happened and see if that kid could get counseling so he doesn't hurt himself anymore, or someone else.

"Keep Kids Safe" would be my motto. I wouldn't want a parent going through the nightmare of losing a child.

JALONDA WOODYARD

If I were offered drugs, I would simply say, "No!" Why should I ruin my life? Drug abuse is a terrible thing. Together we can end it.

To help my community, I can start by being involved. One thing to think about is drug abuse. We have to fight.

HOLLY MCGLAUGHLIN

If offered drugs, I'd say NO. I'd then run to the nearest safe place. Later I'd describe the man to the police so they'd catch him.

A group of teenagers, like me, could explain to younger kids what drugs are. Hopefully we'll lead them to the right choice about drugs.

MENDY SECHRIST

If offered drugs, one answer comes to my mind: NO! Drugs hurt and harm. who wants to do that to their bodies anyway? Say NO!

As a citizen, I feel my job is to be an "informer". I'd spread the word of the pain, guilt, and strings attached to drugs.

JENNIFER HINES

If I were offered drugs I would say, "NO!" I don't need drugs. They don't help me with my problems, only create worse ones.

I would help my community by telling others the facts about drugs. If I knew someone was taking drugs I would get them help.

S. 2129

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, today we stand ready to send a bill to the President that will give consumers some immediate relief to the high cost of liability insurance. I would like to commend the efforts of the gentlemen from New York and New Jersey for all their hard work in getting us to this point.

This self-help measure provides nurse/midwives, truckers, restaurant owners, child care centers, small businesses and other insurance consumers with the bargaining power they need to cope with the rising cost of liability coverage. The Federal role remains limited in this bill. It doesn't repeal the McCarran-Ferguson Act. It doesn't create any new bureaucracies, and it won't cost the Federal Government anything.

Groups that are priced out of the current market would benefit from this act in two important ways. First, this legislation would give a group sharing similar risks the opportunity to set up their own insurance cooperative. This cooperative would be chartered in one State and be able to operate nationwide under one set of rules. Because the establishment of an insurance cooperative is beyond the ability of certain groups, this legislation provides a second option. This second option would allow a group of insurance consumers with similar risks to pool their buying power and form a purchasing group that could find group coverage with an insurance company. This is very important because members of these groups will be able to obtain more favorable terms, rates, and conditions of liability coverage on a uniform group basis. Both of these options would give insurance consumers greater leverage in the marketplace.

There has been some discussion about whether this legislation sufficiently protects consumers. In fact, State insurance commissioners will have more tools to protect consumers in a risk retention group under this bill than they do under more traditional forms of insurance. These consumer protection measures are not meant to be used to arbitrarily frustrate the formation and operation of risk retention and purchasing groups. Under these provisions, a State should be able to protect the public without unduly hindering the operation of these groups.

The subject of financial responsibility has been given special attention in this legislation. This legislation is not meant to undermine the ability of a State to set standards of financial responsibility as a condition for obtaining a license or permit to do business or perform a service in a State. However, this provision does not provide States with the authority to inhibit the formation of risk retention or purchasing groups. As stated in the House committee report, any such discriminatory use of State authority would be contrary to the intent of this legislation.

I would like to comment briefly on one of the provisions added by the other body. Section 11(c) of the legislation before us seeks to establish a rule of interpretation with regard to this legislation and a similar provision on Pollution Liability Insurance included in the Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act of 1986. The intent of section 11(c) appears to amend the recently passed Superfund bill so as to have the provisions of this legislation prevail where there may be a conflict.

Frankly, I do not believe this provision accomplishes that objection. It is a well-established rule of statutory interpretation that where two statutes address a single issue, the one which is most recently enacted will prevail. Similarly, it is impossible for this statute—should it be enacted before Superfund—to amend a new Superfund bill which is not yet enacted. Regardless of the provision in this statute, when the President signs that subsequent act—should it take place in that order—the subsequent measures will be enacted as the President signs it.

I hope that the President promptly signs the Superfund amendments which were passed yesterday by the House, and that this issue does not arise.

However, if the circumstances occur as I have suggested, let there be no mistake that those in this body do not believe that section 11(c) will have any effect.

All of us have in our districts businesses and people who provide services are still having trouble finding liability insurance. This lack of affordable liability insurance is endangering key sectors of the economy. Tourism and outdoor recreation are vital industries to the economy of Oregon. Yet recreation outfitters and other such groups in my State are hard-pressed to find affordable insurance coverage for their outdoor recreation activities on public lands. Obtaining permission to conduct these activities on public lands often requires liability coverage. This legislation will provide this group with an important alternative when seeking to find this necessary insurance.

This legislation is no cure-all, but it's a strong step in the right direction. Our constituents have demanded that Congress act. Let's send this bill to the President for signing.

MEDICAL SERVICE PROGRAM OF INDIANA COUNTY, PA

HON. JOE KOLTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. KOLTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a volunteer, nonprofit service organization located in Indiana County, PA, which has helped provide hundreds of umemployed individuals with low cost or no cost health care. The Medical Service Program of Indiana was initiated in late 1984 and has served well over 1,600 people in less than 3 years. The program was started to expand the range of health care available for those individuals who cannot afford to pay for health care, and who have no health care plans of their own. The Medical Service Program has recruited many local physicians, dentists, optometrists, and pharmacists who provide services at a minimal cost. It also acts as a referral agency, directing those individuals who need medical treatment to the proper sources of care and publicizing the availability of such care to the unemployed of Indiana County.

For the past 3 years this remarkable nonprofit organization has existed solely through the generosity of the Indiana County commissioners' annual donation and donations from a variety of other local sources. It has operated on a shoestring budget of less than $6,000, mostly due to the dedication of its director, Mr. Gary Lefevbre. This young man, unemployed initially himself, has worked thousands of hours to help the unfortunate of Indiana County. His strength and perseverance has been a shining light which has led many others to help as well.

Mr. Speaker, I want to offer my sincerest and deepest thanks to these courageous individuals of Indiana who have shown through their kind deeds and actions that the proud people of Indiana County do care for their own. I salute them and hope that one day the terrible malady of unemployment will be erased from Indiana County forever.

PTO AUTHORIZATION

HON. ROBERT W. KASTENMEIER.

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, during House floor debate on H.R. 2434—to authorize appropriations for the Patent and Trademark Office in the U.S. Department of Commerce, a concluding paragraph was not printed in the daily edition of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD (October 2, 1986). Due to the importance of this paragraph, I have made the necessary correction in the permanent record. In addition, I would like to share it with my colleagues before enactment of the reauthorization legislation.

The text of the paragraph follows:

Mr. KASTENMEIER. The overall agreement is made contingent on three further policy factors. First, the appropriation/user fee percentage for funding automation—70/30 percent—in no way sets a precedent for future authorizations. It may be that either less or more user fees will be used to fund automation in the future. Second, the compromise clearly proceeds on the assumption that automation of the Patent and Trademark Office operations should proceed. Finally, the Office's retention of user fees—or "back door" spending—must be carefully examined in the next authorization. What needs to be scrutinized is is not charging fees for certain activities, but whether fees can be retained by the Office, and how fee decisions are made in the public interest.

TRIBUTE TO THOMAS P. O'NEILL, JR., SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE

HON. SALA BURTON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mrs. BURTON of California. Mr. Speaker, as the time approaches for Speaker O'NEILL's retirement, I want to add my comments to the host of accolades that will accompany him as he departs these Halls. Although our Speaker seeks retirement from this office, the wisdom and humanity that have graced his tenure as Speaker will always remain here with us as the outstanding hallmarks of his service to the Nation.

The very special friendship and concern he has shared over the years, and particularly during my term in the Congress, will always be valued and remembered. The "Boys at Barry's Corner" are testimony to the enduring friendships he has sustained with so many. "TIP" has never forgotten his roots and we will never forget his big heart and good will.

The compassion and concern he has demonstrated toward those who are less privileged and outside the mainstream of luxury are the monuments that will remain in our memories. The legacy "TIP" imparts to our world is a lifetime of caring and that of a great Speaker.

May I extend to "TIP," and to Millie, my very best wishes as they begin this new chapter and my sincere hopes for happy and fulfilling days ahead. We will miss you, "TIP."

IRRESISTIBLE OFFER

HON. G.V. (SONNY) MONTGOMERY

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, the Army has once again demonstrated its commitment to the new GI bill. The active duty side of the Army has already shown this new Educational Assistance Program is a very effective recruitment tool and the Army continues to do the job. Now the Army National Guard is coming on strong by using great creativity in publicizing the new GI bill program (Chapter 106 of title 10, United States Code) available to the Guard and Reserves.

Designed by Col. C.E. Rhodes, Chief of the Army Personnel Division, the Army Guard is distributing wallet-size information cards which describe the benefits available under the Chapter 106 Program as well as eligibility requirements for participation. In bold letters on the front of the card appear the words "irresistible offer." What young person would pass by and not investigate this bold assertion? I have no doubt that a great many high quality young men and women will join the Army Guard as a direct result of reading this informative card.

I want to extend my congratulations to the Honorable James Webb, Assistant Secretary of Defense for Reserve Affairs, Maj. Gen. Stuart H. Sherman, Jr., Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Reserve Affairs, Lt. Gen. Emmett H. Walker, Jr. (retired). former Chief, National Guard Bureau, Maj. Gen. Herbert R. Temple, Jr., Chief, National Guard Bureau and Brig. Gen. Richard Dean, Acting Director, Army National Guard. The support that all of these individuals are showing for the new GI bill is encouraging to those of us who worked so hard to establish this vital, needed program.

LAURA JOY WITTENBERG CELEBRATES BAT MITZVAH

HON. HOWARD L. BERMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, on November 8, 1986, Laura Joy Wittenberg will celebrate her bat mitzvah at the Brandeis-Bardin Institute. Before her parents, Richard and Joyce Wittenberg, family, friends, and congregation, Laura will be taking her place as an adult member of the religious community. The ceremony will include Laura's recitation from the Torah and her personal statement reflecting on her life and studies thus far and how she perceives her place in future society.

When I hear of children like Laura, I am optimistic about our future. I know from Laura's father that she is the kind of child that is going to make a positive difference in this world. Her beauty, intelligence, and concern for her fellow human beings will allow her to achieve much. I have no doubt that she will succeed in the sense of personal accomplishments, but also in the sense that she will make substantial contributions to society.

It is my honor to wish Laura success and happiness on this important day; and to the entire Wittenberg family mazel tov. May Laura and her brothers David and Kevin always be a source of pride.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. WILLIAM E. DANNEMEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, unfortunately due to a previous commitment in my congressional district, I could not attend the session on Tuesday, October 7, and subsequently missed four votes. Had I been present I would have voted:

"Yea" on rollcall No. 434, final passage of H.R. 5445 as amended, to amend chapter 96 of title 18, U.S. Code pertaining to civil RICO;

"Nay" on rollcall No. 435, final passage of House Resolution 2880, as amended, to provide a temporary extension of the interstate transfer deadline for the H-3;

"Yea" on rollcall No. 435, final passage of H.R. 5215, to authorize construction by the Secretary of Agriculture of a salinity laboratory at Riverside, CA; and "Nay" on rollcall No. 437, final passage of H.R. 2868, to settle Indian land claims in the town of Gay Head, MA.

TRIBUTE TO HANS H. DOE

HON. RON PACKARD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Hans H. Doe, a Vista, CA resident since 1946, will be retiring from the board of directors of the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California on October 20, 1986.

Mr. Doe has served the water community of California faithfully for over 35 years, the last 27 years of which he served continuously as a member of the MWD board representing the San Diego County Water Authority.

Some of the projects of benefit to San Diego County during his tenure include the construction of the State water project at a cost of over $2 billion, construction of Lake Skinner and its Robert A. Skinner Treatment Plant at a cost of over $30 million and, most importantly, the development of a water system allowing MWD to deliver an ample supply of imported water to nearly 13 million persons in the counties of Los Angeles, Orange, Riverside, San Bernardino, Ventura, and San Diego.

Mr. Doe started this extensive water career in 1950 on a "temporary" basis—the rest is history.

I would like to salute the outstanding accomplishments of Mr. Hans Doe and his wife Margaret. It is through dedication to service, foresight, and long-range planning that the citizens of San Diego County enjoy the fruits of his labor.

MAY THE MEETING IN ICELAND PRODUCE AN EXIT VISA FOR IDA NUDEL

HON. PATRICIA SCHROEDER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of the approaching meeting between President and Chairman Gorbachev in Iceland, I wish to remind my colleagues of the situation of Ida Nudel. I hope that the efforts of the President to discuss humanitarian issues will lead to an exit visa for this courageous woman.

For 15 years, Ms. Nudel has been seeking an exit visa so that she may join her sister, Ilana Fridman, in Israel. She has assisted other refusniks and their families. For her efforts, she has been denied an exist visa repeatedly, treated violently, arrested, tried, and sentenced to exile in Siberia, where she lived for 4 years. While there, she was beaten and then housed in a barrack lacking electricity, water, and heat at a time when temperatures dropped to 40 degrees below zero.

When Ms. Nudel returned to Moscow, she was not allowed to live in her home. It is often difficult for refusniks to find a place to stay, so it took her several months to find a place in Bendery, Moldavia.

I am very concerned about the conditions under which Ms. Nudel is living now. Recent reports indicate that the way she walks and looks show that her health is very poor. She has been harassed in her efforts to obtain medical care. Her sister has told us that people are afraid to be her friend and that she is very lonely.

I hope that the Soviet Union will take the humanitarian route and give Ms. Nudel an exit visa soon so that she may be reunited with her family.

TRIBUTE TO LOTTIE MASSIE

HON. CARROLL HUBBARD, JR.

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to Lottie Louise Robinson Massie of Hopkinsville, KY, who died Saturday, September 13, 1986, at the age of 75.

Lottie Massie was a dear friend to many in Hopkinsville and western Kentucky. A native of Hopkinsville, she was the daughter of the late Frank and Addie Merriweather Robinson. She was a retired schoolteacher, having taught for 24 years in the Christian County school system at Booker T. Washington and Indian Hills elementary Schools at Hopkinsville. In addition, she taught at an elementary school for 5 years in western Tennessee.

Mrs. Massie was a longtime active member of the Virginia Street Baptist Church in Hopkinsville, spending many years teaching Sunday school classes there. She was also very active in her community, having performed volunteer work for the Pennyrile Museum, the Red Cross, and the Medco Center Nursing Home.

Survivors of Lottie Massie include a son, Daniel Frank Massie of Louisville, KY; a daughter, Vivian Hicks of Hopkinsville; a brother, Milton Robinson of Ripley, TN; three sisters, Gladys Bronaugh and Sarah Cruce, both of Indianapolis, IN, and Piccola Bundrent of Louisville; and three grandchildren. Her late husband, John Daniel Massie, predeceased her in 1977.

Lottie Massie was a great asset to Hopkinsville and Christian County, and she will be missed for years to come.

My wife Carol and I join with the many friends of this outstanding Kentuckian in extending our sympathy to the family of Lottie Massie.

TRIBUTE TO THE PAYNE CHAPEL AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

HON. MICKEY LELAND

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the Payne Chapel African Methodist Episcopal Church in Houston, TX. The church will be celebrating its 100th anniversary during the week of October 12, 1986.

The theme of this celebration is "A Salute to 100 Years of Victorious Christian Service" and is a fitting tribute to the history of Payne Chapel. From the time of the church's founding in 1886 on the 1500 block of Hill Street in Houston, the church has been an active, progressive force in the community.

The guiding spirit which led to the founding of Payne Chapel originated in a group of black members of a segregated church in Philadelphia. They left that institution in 1787 and inspired the founders of Payne chapel 100 years later.

Today, under the leadership of Reverend Arthur J. Bundage, the church's members continue to be active participants in the community. I commend Payne Chapel African Methodist Episcopal Church for its years of service to Houston, and I congratulate the church and its members on this, their 100th anniversary.

PRICE-ANDERSON ACT: LEAD-OFF ISSUE FOR 100TH CONGRESS

HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, I addressed the House on the apparent demise of the Price-Anderson Act renewal legislation for this year. I find it unfortunate that the House was unable to debate the Price-Anderson renewal bill before adjournment since current law is so inadequate in providing coverage to victims of nuclear accidents.

Today, I want to make sure that all Members understand where we stand on this legislation. The Price-Anderson Act expires on August 1, 1987. In other words, the 100th Congress will have a full 7 months in which to renew and improve the Price-Anderson Act. Given the enormous amount of time and effort invested into the issue this year, I expect the 100th Congress will act with dispatch to pass this legislation.

The major issues left unresolved by the committee consideration of this bill are few, albeit significant. Unfortunately, it was the opinion of the Rules Committee that the unresolved issues were not few enough to let the bill go to the floor this year at this late date in the schedule. Nevertheless, I expect this legislation, or similar legislation next year, to be considered under an open rule and resolved in a relatively short time period early next year. As we all know, the beginning months of a new Congress are not overflowing with legislative activity. I am confident that there will be ample time in the spring of next year for Congress to fully debate and appove Price-Anderson renewal legislation.

As chairman of the subcommittee which has wrestled with this issue for 5 months, and as a member of both of the committees with jurisdiction for commercial nuclear accident liability, I can assure all Members that this issue will be the first item on the nuclear legislative agenda next year. Renewal of Price-Anderson is very very important to the nuclear industry, and it is very important to those citizens living near nuclear powerplants. There will be a substantial amount of pressure from both of these constituencies for the 100th Congress to move swiftly to renew this legislation. The Congress next year will not shrink from that responsibility. There will be a Price-Anderson renewal bill considered by the House before the summer next year, and I plan to work with all my colleagues to insure that a strong Price-Anderson bill is enacted well before the August 1, 1987, expiration date.

TEMPLE EMANU-EL

HON. DON EDWARDS

OF CALIFORNIA

HON. NORMAN Y. MINETA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. EDWARDS of California and Mr. MINETA. Mr Speaker, we would like to ask you and our distinguished colleagues to join us in saluting Temple Emanu-El in San Jose, CA, as they celebrate their 125th anniversary in Santa Clara County.

In 1861, the population was sparse in the Santa Clara Valley, but there was great promise for growth because gold had been discovered in the Sierra Nevada just 12 years before. Many people were lured to leave their homes in Europe and the Eastern United States to seek their fortunes in commerce and trade. On August 5, 1861, a meeting was held to organize a Hebrew Society in San Jose, CA. The officers of this fledgling congregation were Jacob Levy, president; Jacob Rich, vice president; Morris Lubliner, secretary; Solomon Eisner, treasurer; Mayer Levy, L. Morris and Hyman Rich, trustees.

The name Bickur Cholim, meaning visiting the sick, was adopted and the purpose of this society was threefold: First, it was to establish a house or worship; second, it was to provide care for the sick and needy; and third, it was to provide a consecrated burial place.

In 1863, a land search and building campaign was formed so that Bickur Cholim could have its own site. And in August 1870, their first facility was dedicated at San Antonio and Third Streets. The synagogue prospered, but remained small. In 1940, the 70-year-old synagogue was forced to close due to an unexplained fire. Following the fire, numerous churches loaned the congregation their facilities. During this time, the congregation began to grow, in step with the burgeoning growth of the Santa Clara Valley.

In 1948, the new building became a reality and Bickur Cholim became Temple Emanu-El, meaning God Be With Us. The new facility was completed and opened its doors at University and Myrtle Street.

From 1948 to 1961, Temple Emanu-El saw unprecedented growth as families came from Europe and the Eastern States, not unlike the original influx of settlers. But it wasn't commerce and trade which lured them here to the Valley of Hearts Delight, rather the space and engineering industry. In 1955, the Temple

House was completed, and in 1958 the school building was dedicated.

Membership reached more than 1,000 families, and over 600 students filled the school in 1971. In 1976, the school was renamed the Rabbi Joseph and Rosalie Gitin Religous School in honor of their then-retiring Senior Rabbi and his wife.

Throughout the years, the leaders of the temple have distinguished themselves in the community and the surrounding cities have always recognized the value of their leadership. Business and industry have also recognized the special talents of Temple Emanu-El members, and a number of businesses which were established in the 19th century by its early members still bear those illustrious names.

Therefore, we ask you, Mr. Speaker, and our colleagues to join us in honoring and celebrating the 125th anniversary of Temple Emanu-El. We sincerely hope the next 125 years of achievement will match the first 125 years.

INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY AND TRADE

HON. ROBERT W. KASTENMEIER

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 9, 1986

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, intellectual property and trade issues are now a dominant part of our policy discussions. Without question, the American creative genius has been nurtured by strong legal tradition of protecting the property rights of intellectual property owners. As we undertake a discussion of these issues my colleagues may benefit from two recent articles from the New York Times. These articles articulate why this issue is no complex.

[From the New York Times, Oct. 5, 1986]

COPYRIGHTS ARE AS VITAL AS MERCHANDISE

(By Elliott Hurwitz)

Itaewon, a sprawling commercial district in South Korea's capital of Seoul, is a bargain-hunter's paradise. In shops and on the streets, vendors hawk audiotape cassettes for $2.50—before any bargaining starts. Authenic-looking Louis Vuitton handbags are $12, and Gore-Tex running suits, which sell for $150 in the States, go for $45. The standard price for all types of Reebok athletic shoes is $10. The major constraint facing shoppers in not paying for, but physically carrying, all the products they would like to buy.

The products sold in Korea, as in many other Asian and Latin American countries, are frequently counterfeits—illegal copies of popular branded merchandise. Some may be of poor quality, but most seem to be well made and cannot be distinguished from the real thing. Some may indeed be the real thing: Many foreign companies have their goods made in Korea, and local factories can easily turn out extras.

In Korea and many other Asian countries, however, all this may be changing, as their governments move to strengthen the protection afforded to "intellectual property." Specialists use this term to denote a wide range of goods and services, including branded merchandise and patented products, as well as creative work, such as books and movies.

Degrees of permissiveness vary among countries. In some, protection may be adequate for patented products, but weak for new technologies or services such as semiconductor chips, computer software, data bases, or telecasts. And in other countries, formal legal protection may be sufficient, but enforcement lacking.

In an encouraging move last July, Korea, settling a trade dispute with the United States, said that it would submit strong legislation to its National Assembly to increase the protection given to sound recordings and computer software. Additional legislation will be submitted extending patent coverage to numerous chemical and pharmaceutical products currently unprotected. Enforcement of copyrights is to be strengthened, and Korea will study the feasibility of extending protection to data bases, computer chips, and cable and satellite television broadcasts. Finally, Korea has said it will also join certain international intellectual property conventions.

The Korean agreement stands as a benchmark in the acceptance of intellectual property protection as a major trade issue. As the agreement is carried out, it will dramatically improve the protection afforded to those specific products and services in which the United States has a strong competitive advantage.

While Korea has taken the lead, other Asian nations are moving to strengthen protection as well; in Singapore, a copyright bill is working its way through Parliament; in Indonesia, officials have said they will submit such a bill later this year; in Malaysia, the parliament is considering a proposed copyright law.

Violation of intellectual property rights is by no means limited to Asia, however. There have also been reports that signals from satellites owned by American cable companies have been captured and illegally retransmitted on cable system in Central America. The cable operators then charge their subscribers for the signals they acquire for free.

As the American comparative advantage in the manufacture of many goods has declined, the Reagan Administration has insisted that creative or artistic products where we still have an important edge—in computer software, music cassettes, or Hollywood films, for example—be protected from piracy. In bilateral negotiations, officials have made it plain to our trading partners that we are unwilling to tolerate illegal copying of our branded merchandise while we maintain complete protection for their goods and open markets for their manufactures.

At the same time, the Administration has often met resistance from nations where protection of intellectual property may not be part of the prevailing culture. Until recently, many overseas governments were unwilling or unable to crack down on illegal duplication of products. In this context, it is significant that Korea agreed to strengthen the protection afforded to precisely those products in which the United States has a strong advantage.

More important, however, our trading partners have come to realize that protecting intellectual property affords them important benefits. For example, effective patent protection is a strong incentive to foreign technology owners to license products or participate in joint ventures in countries like Korea. Such ventures can provide a strong stimulus to developing economies. Fundamentally, stronger intellectual property protection demonstrates a nation's commitment to integrate itself more fully into the world trading system and to undertake the obligations, as well as receiving the benefits, of this system. No nation wishes to be known as a haven for counterfeiters.

The trend toward stronger protection of intellectual property is likely to continue. The need was one focus of the new trade round discussed recently by trade ministers at the conference of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade in Uruguay. This round will not only reduce tariffs on manufactured goods, as has been done in the past, but is also expected to reduce obstacles to trade in agricultural products and services. The move toward inclusion of intellectual property in the new trade round recognizes the emergence of this issue as one of considerable importance to the world's major trading powers.

A HIGH COST TO DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

(By Kyung-Won Kim)

Last July 21, the Republic of Korea agreed with the United States to increase its protection of patents, copyrights and trademarks. The negotiations were difficult, in part because the changes were widely viewed in Korea as having been won by the economic power of a large country from a smaller one. The United States claimed that Korea must change its intellectual property rules in order to insure international norms of fairness.

The Korean public, however, remembers that the United States was not as preoccupied about fairness when it enjoyed a trade surplus with Korea, a situation that lasted for nearly 40 years only ended a few years ago. And today, more than one-third of Korea's annual exports to the United States are covered by such import restrictions as quotas, excessive "dumping" margins and repetitious "temporary" relief measures.

Historically, Koreans have not viewed intellectual discoveries or scientific inventions as the private property of their discoverers or inventors. New ideas or technologies were "public goods" for everybody to share freely. Cultural esteem rather than material gain was the incentive for creativity.

The development of patent and copyright protection in Korea is similar to what has happened historically in other developed nations. Patent and copyright protection is provided by a country only when it has intellectual property that needs to be protected, that is, when its inventors and artists are close to catching up with the state of the art in their fields.

When that happens, patent, copyright or brand-name protection becomes an incentive to further research and production—whereas, in an early stage such protection had been an obstacle to obtaining techology.

This process was characteristic of other countries exhibiting rapid development, including the United States. Korea, in fact, has agreed to protect intellectual property at a far earlier stage of industrialization than either the United States or Japan. Many early American writers were never able to collect royalties on their works because there was no copyright protection.

In the 19th century, the United States often recruited skilled foreign workers who could bring new, sometimes secret, technology with them. The recent agreement between Korea and the United States is far superior to the record of any similar developed country.

Innovation and technology "diminish gradually the real price of almost all manufacturers," as Adam Smith wrote. To encourage this creation process, societies provide incentives; patents and copyrights. But, patents and copyrights can also create obstacles to development. They grant monopoly power to discoverers and inventors.

The exercise of monopoly power, in almost all cases, results in much higher prices and, thus, less use of ideas, designs, and productive techniques by the world. A critical problem for poor developing countries is drastic price increases in such necessities as processed food, prescription drugs and textbooks.

In recent years, the increase in real interest rates has driven up the relative real price of patents and placed a further damper on developing-country growth where patents are enforced. Scholars may argue about exactly how much enforcement drives up the price of technology, but the historical record is clear; developing countries have rarely paid the price in the past.

As its economy has grown, Korea has become sensitive to the value others place on protecting the property rights of inventors, artists, and the manufacturers of brand-name products. The protection of intellectual property rights is, however, only a part of the effort that Korea has made to integrate its economy into the industrialized world.

The first steps were taken in the late 1970's when Korea, despite a chronic current account deficit and a large foreign debt, began removing controls that limited imports well before the United States began pressing Korea to open its economy.

Today, more than 92 percent of the different products traded internationally can be freely imported, a record unmatched by any developing country with a per-capita gross natonal product of only $2,000. Also, Korea has started to open up industries to foreign investment that had previously been closed or restricted. Foreign banks provide services through 50 branches operating in Korea; 20 of them from the United States.

Still, some Americans argue that Korea should make more rapid changes. They fail to recognize that opening industrial and financial markets and fully protecting intellectual property require our companies and workers to adapt to major changes. This takes time.

A sudden, comprehensive liberalization of the Korean economy woud cause Korea to plunge into a deep recession. Failure to take that into consideration threatens the Korean political consensus in support of free and fair trade.

Korea remains committed to free and fair trade and is moving as fast as economic conditions and political support permit. It is one of the few developing countries that has supported the United States in its call for a new GATT round designed to dismantle growing protectionism in world markets. Korea believes that its record deserves better recognition than it has received.

NEED TO ASSURE SAFE USE OF ARTIFICIAL GROWTH HORMONE

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing H.R. 5695, a bill to assure the appropriate and safe use of artificially produced growth hormone.

Mr. Speaker, this bill would have the same effect as H.R. 5653, which I introduced on October 6, but includes the addition of a provision delaying the effective date. My remarks in the RECORD concerning H.R. 5653 certainly apply to this bill as well. I would only add that there is substantial support in the sports medicine community for placing human growth hormone into schedule II of the Controlled Substances Act.

A recent article in the August 10, 1986, Washington Post notes that a number of physicians, including the chief medical officer for the U.S. Olympic Committee, favor making this hormone a controlled substance. Action is urgently needed to prevent this important medication from becoming abused by athletes, anxious or pushy parents, and unprofessional physicians.

Classification of artificial human growth hormone as a schedule II substance would in no way limit the proper use of this drug, nor would it inhibit necessary research. It would, however, provide appropriate safeguards against the deliberate and potentially life-threatening abuse of this product.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join with me in taking this small step to protect the public while scientific research continues on the safety and efficacy of using artificially produced human growth hormone.

Without objection, I ask that the following article entitled: "Growth Hormone Proves To Be Tempting for Athletes" from the August 10 Washington Post be printed in the RECORD at this point.

GROWTH HORMONE PROVES TO BE TEMPTING FOR ATHLETES

(By Dave Sell)

"And there seems to be little doubt, therefore, that chronic administration of exogenous human growth hormone also will produce a human giant, and perhaps a giant athlete with gargantuan abilities!"—Dr. William N. Taylor.

The use of anabolic steroids has been a fact of life for some athletes for more than a decade, but in the last few years something new has found its way into the medicine cabinets. The substance is human growth hormone, and it has some athletes and physicians convinced it could lead to a world in which sprinters run the 100 meters in less than eight seconds and 308-pound William Perry is too small to play professional football.

Human growth hormone is used almost exclusively to treat children suffering with dwarfism, a condition that occurs when the pituitary gland fails to produce enough of the hormone naturally. Only since October, when a mass-produced synthetic form of the hormone was approved for use, has it begun to be used in research.

Those athletes using it, doctors say, are under the impression that they will gain height (depending on their age) and lean muscle mass and will better utilize fat. Athletes, who obtain growth hormone mainly through the black market, are also attracted to it because, as of now, there is no test to detect it.

Still, because there has been no definitive research completed on the hormone's effects—beneficial or harmful—there is considerable disagreement among doctors and others close to the issue as to whether there is any beneficial effect for athletes.

Some are convinced that use of growth hormone could lead to the day that, instead of cheering for The Fridge, fans would be yelling for three-bedroom colonials. Others aren't so sure. And a number of experts say they think growth hormone should be classified as a controlled substance until those questions are answered.

Taylor, a Tucker, Ga., physician with an emphasis on sports medicine, has studied and written about the misuse of steroids and growth hormone by athletes. Of growth hormone he said, "I'm convinced it will enhance height and muscular strength."

YOU CAN'T TRUST ATHLETES

"There's no question that it's been used by a lot of athletes," said Terry Todd, a former power lifter who is a professor of physical education at the University of Texas, where he was the host of a seminar on the subject earlier this year.

Taylor attended the seminar, as did Robert B. Kerr, a southern California physician who said he has prescribed growth hormone for about 100 athletes, though not in the last two years; and Don H. Catlin, chief of clinical pharmacology at UCLA Medical Center and director of drug-testing during the 1984 Los Angeles Summer Olympics, who said he would never prescribe growth hormone for athletic performance reasons.

"I don't think the use of growth hormone is a widespread problem in the sense of anabolic steroids," Catlin said. "Sure some have tried it to see, but the magnitude is probably low. I don't know that, but I deduce the amount is low because I've talked to athletes one on one and . . . I asked them, and some would say, 'Well, maybe, I tried it but it doesn't work.'

"I'm not surprised that it doesn't; though, again, it's not knowing the facts. But the amount taking it is really quite small. In my opinion, which comes from my knowledge of internal medicine, endocrinology and the study of growth hormone, I don't see any beneficial effect. The only evidence is Dr. Kerr's articles in muscle magazines and anecdotes. I know of no scientific evidence that it works. But I also know of no evidence that it doesn't work.

Kerr said the hormone is used extensively in Europe and "I believe it is an anabolic agent." He said he no longer prescribes it because athletes, particularly body-builders, don't follow his instructions.

"I used to think that because so many were taking black market anabolic steroids that, if the physician gave a little guidance and said to them that a little will give them the gains they want without taking the other things, it would be better," Kerr said, "But they take what I prescribe and supplement it with five or six other things. I've changed my mind. You can't trust athletes."

The possible side effects include diabetes, hypertension and a condition known as acromegaly. The condition, which results from an oversupply of growth hormone, can leave a person with Neanderthal-like facial features, larger hands and feet, thicker skin, heart disease and shorter life expectancy.

Kerr said that the amounts he gave were small.

"When you take large amounts, you're going to see acromegaly," Kerr said. "What I was using in adults was one-fifth of what they use in a 8- to 10-year old."

Normally, growth hormone is produced by the pituitary gland and is responsible for triggering growth, either directly or by activating other chemicals in the body, during the growth years which end at about age 17. However, the Human Growth Foundation, located in Bethesda, estimates that in the United States there are 10,000 to 15,000 children whose pituitary glands don't produce enough of the hormone. If the disease, referred to as dwarfism, isn't treated, the children may reach adult heights of substantially less than five feet.

INFECTION A DANGER

Until the synthetic human growth hormone was approved for use by the Food and Drug Administration, the only source of the hormone was through extraction from the pituitary glands of human cadavers. And, according to the company producing the synthetic hormone, it took 50 human cadavers to keep one child supplied with the hormone for one year. That meant two things: a) the supply was extremely low and b) the cost was extremely high, upward of $20,000 a year. However, in the spring of 1985, the natural hormone was taken off the market when it was linked to four deaths from Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease, an extremely rare brain infection.

But the purity problem and the supply barriers may be lessened now that Genentech Inc. of South San Francisco has been allowed to market its synthetic human growth hormone, which has a trade name of Protropin.

Although the greater supply will mean a happier future for children with dwarfism, it also will increase the likelihood that the hormone will find its way to athletes through a doctor's prescription or the black market.

A Genentech spokesperson, acknowledging the possibility of misuse by athletes, said the company will distribute the synthetic hormone only through hospital pharmacies to about 500 pediatric endocrinologists and 500 adult endocrinologists who also treat children. The spokesperson added, "There is no clinical study that indicates any advantage to an adult in taking growth hormone."

Because of the short supply, and the ethical problems involved with doing tests on humans, there has not been a thorough scientific study done to measure what effect human growth hormone has on normal adults or normal children, and what the side effects are for those two groups. That leaves only anecdotal evidence, theory and more questions than answers.

"It's not okay to make superficial dogma based on no research," Taylor said. "It gets you into trouble every time." He proposes that the hormone be registered as a controlled substance. Currently, human growth hormone is available through prescription.

PARENTS WANT AN EDGE

Even with all the questions, Dr. Rebecca Kirkland, a professor of pediatrics specializing in endocrinology at Baylor University, said she gets several calls a week from parents inquiring about growth hormone for their children.

"They think the growth hormone will give their child an added advantage," said Kirkland, who added that she usually persuades them to simply wait.

Not all parents are so easily persuaded. Taylor recalled the father of a 16-year-old, 6-foot-6 basketball player coming into his office with his own supply of growth hormone.

"The father came in and said, "How much do I give him?" Kerr said. "He had obtained it from a Florida health club."

As more companies produce the synthetic hormone, Taylor thinks it's "only a matter of time" before it becomes readily available to athletes.

Said Kerr: "When you have an overabundance, there is a greater likelihood of it getting on the black market. There's also a lot of fake products on the black market, and people pay fantastic prices for them."

Taylor, Todd, Kerr and Dr. Robert Voy, chief medical officer for the U.S. Olympic Committee, favor making the hormone a controlled substance.

"The drug ought to be controlled to give research scientists five to 10 years to work with it," Taylor said. "We have no clue what it really does. It does have potential to increase height and the potential for abuse. If a doctor is willing to write down the [Drug Enforcement Administration] number for a drug, he's saying it's for a legitimate purpose. Now, if he wants to write it for 50 athletes . . . it's like penicillin—it's difficult to follow."

Dr. Richard P. Bowles, a family practitioner with an interest in sports medicine, would like to see human growth hormone classified as a Schedule II controlled substance. Schedule II, the second-most tightly controlled of the five classes, includes cocaine. (Schedule I includes drugs such as heroin for which there is no acceptable medical use, according to the DEA.)

TRACKING SCHEDULE II DRUGS

Substances on Schedule II cannot be prescribed by phone, cannot be refilled, must be stored in a vault or safe and must be carefully recorded. The DEA also has a computerized method for tracking Schedule II drugs. Misuse of a controlled substance can bring stiff criminal penalties and, depending on the classification, can include physicians losing their licenses if the substance is prescribed illegitimately.

"It is both wonderful and fearsome," Bowles said of the hormone's capabilities. And of the effort to have it controlled, he said, "That way it would still be available and it still can be prescribed. But it can give a severe sting for abusers, enough so that the use in that regard would be curtailed."

Dr. John Gueriguian, an FDA supervising medical officer who was involved with the Genentech case, said, "We have to count on the medical integrity of the doctors who should prescribe it for legitimate purposes. People would have to be immensely stupid to take it if they didn't need it. It doesn't work [to build muscle], it costs too much, it's detrimental to yourself and may be illegal."

Others aren't so sure that will keep all athletes from trying it.

"We'll bury our heads in the sand and forget about it," Taylor said. "It's a major cancer in the fitness revolution. It's only been since '84 that the medical profession said steroids were effective. Before that we said it was a placebo. That is the most ridiculous scenario and it got us into the problem with steroids, and I think it's unprofessional—hear no evil, speak no evil, see no evil, and don't stir up any trouble."

Said Todd: "It's somewhat similar to the position people took on anabolic steroids until they became laughingstocks."

Like steroids, the use of human growth hormone is one more attempt at better performance through chemicals.

"That tells you about the value system and competitive motivation of some athletes," Todd said. "They want to win awfully bad."

FREEZE ON FULLY AUTOMATIC FIREARMS

HON. BOB STUMP

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, recently Members of Congress received a letter that misrepresents the issues surrounding the recently enacted freeze on fully automatic firearms. To set the record straight, the freeze was enacted despite expert testitmony that such action would not impact on crime, as it would not address the problem of illegally owned, manufactured and/or converted full-auto-fire weapons.

This past Congress, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms [BATF] Director, Stephen F. Higgins, testified before the Subcommittee on Crime that "law enforcement problems are caused by illegally converted machineguns, not legally registered machineguns. We recommend stronger restrictions on conversion parts and against a ban on registered machine guns."

Legally registered machineguns are not a problem. That is a fact made abundantly clear by the 52-year record of lawful machinegun ownership, a record which confirms that no crime has ever been committed by those owners with those guns.

The National Firearms Act was enacted in 1934. It requires the registration of all automatic firearms and the payment of a $200 transfer tax on every firearm acquired. In order to acquire an automatic firearm, a person must be 21 years of age, undergo an extensive background check by the FBI, be fingerprinted and photographed, and have his chief local law enforcement officer approve his application. In the more than 50 years the law has been in effect, there is not one documented instance of any firearm acquired under the NFA being missued in a criminal act. An astounding record, to be sure.

This spotless record has left gun control advocates without ammunition to support the freeze, and they are once again reduced to blaming lawful gun owners for the actions of criminals.

Mr. Speaker, the inaccurate information represented by this letter, a letter which offers no proof that there is an "ever-increasing" problem with lawfully owned machineguns and that contradicts the direct testimony of Federal law enforcement, points up the need for full and fair hearings on this topic. I hope that the 100th Congress will do just that.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. WILLIAM F. CLINGER, JR.

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, on October 9, 1986, I was absent for one vote on the floor of the House of Representatives. Had I been present, I would have voted in the following fashion:

Rollcall No. 446: Motion to adjourn, the House rejected a motion to adjourn, "no."

KILDEE HONORS GENESEE COUNTY CHAPTER OF THE MICHIGAN TOWNSHIPS ASSOCIATION

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of my distinguished colleagues in the House of Representatives the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Genesee County Chapter of the Michigan Townships Association. The Genesee County chapter will celebrate this important milestone on October 16, 1986.

The Genesee County chapter was founded in 1961 with the intention of helping charter members become more responsive to the needs of their respective communities. By sharing thoughts and information through monthly meetings and education sessions, the members of the chapter have created a better understanding of township government and how it should best operate on all levels. Through the continuing efforts of this chapter, Genesee County has township government that is unsurpassed. Not only is Genesee County township government effective and competent, but it is also compassionate and dedicated to the needs of the people it represents.

By maintaining a direct working relationship with legislators and officials on local, State and Federal levels, the Genesee County chapter has been a valued partner in the creation of implementation of legislation and governmental policy that has been beneficial to the citizens of Genesee County. The Genesee County chapter is concerned not only with those citizens and issues within its immediate jurisdiction, but also those lying in neighboring chapters as well. By effectively participating in such projects as the building and improvement of sanitary sewers, public water systems, emergency services, planning and development, public transportation, and solid waste facilities, the chapter and its members have helped improve the quality of life for all the people in Genesee County.

Mr. Speaker, during the past 25 years, the Genesee County Chapter of the Michigan Townships Association and its members have displayed exceptional leadership and responsiveness to their communities and those around them. I am confident that the great successes of the chapter over the past 25 years will only be surpassed by actions and accomplishments still to come. I would like now to ask all my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives to join me in paying tribute to the Genesee County Chapter of the Michigan Townships Association, upon the occasion of its 25th anniversary.

TRIBUTE TO HON. JOHN F. SEIBERLING

SPEECH OF

HON. PETER W. RODINO, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 8, 1986

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join my colleagues in tribute to a dear friend and one of the finest members of this great body who will retire at the end of this session—the Honorable JOHN F. SEIBERLING of the 14th District of Ohio.

JOHN SEIBERLING was born into a world of privilege. He is the grandson of the founder of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. But despite his great wealth and prominent ties, he has never forgotten those in our society who are not so blessed. If JOHN'S work in Congress could be summarized in one word, it would be compassion. He has consistently championed the needs of the least protected members of our society—the poor, the elderly, the handicapped, minorities, children. For this work, JOHN will be remembered by the thousands of Americans, in his district and throughout the Nation, whose lives he touched. They will remember him as a man of rare decency.

JOHN was first elected to the House of Representatives in 1970. During his 16-year career in the House, he has successfully led efforts to win millions of dollars in Federal funds for businesses, housing, health care, and the arts in the 14th District.

An ardent conservationist, JOHN authored the American Conservation Corps Act to establish a program for hiring America's youth to work to preserve public lands. To give you an idea of JOHN'S commitment to preserving the beauty of the Nation's parks and wilderness areas, consider that a computer printout of wilderness protection bills he has managed is at least 9 feet long!

JOHN was one of the first Members of this body to condemn the insanity of the Vietnam war, and he has continued to be a staunch advocate for peace.

Since 1971, JOHN has been one of the most dedicated members of the House Judiciary Committee, which I chair. His sensitivity and judgment were indespensible during one of our Nation's darkest hours—the impeachment proceedings against President Richard Nixon.

The Judiciary Committee has also benefited from JOHN'S antitrust expertise. Before his election to Congress, JOHN was a successful antitrust lawyer for over 20 years. He has fought to ensure that the Nation's laws governing the merger of big businesses reflect a sensitivity to consumers, employees, and the communities in which firms operate. JOHN has played a key role in the passage of every antitrust law during the last 16 years. The most important antitrust initiative of this era, the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act of 1976, bears the imprint of JOHN SEIBERLING'S counsel and leadership.

He also was a key member of the National Commission for Review of Antitrust Laws and Procedures during the late 1970's, which spawned five crucial antitrust reform measures that passed the House and became law in 1980. More recently, he has helped to shape the National Cooperative Research Act of 1984, the Municipal Antitrust Act of 1984, and the House Vertical Restraints Resolution of 1985.

Throughout this period, JOHN SEIBERLING has steadfastly resisted the cries of special interests for exemptions from antitrust laws. He is, in short, a man with a vision for free enterprise at its noblest and best.

Although I join my colleagues in expressing sadness at the news of JOHN'S retirement, I wish him well in the coming years. His unique compassion, wisdom and commitment will be missed by those of us in the House and in the Judiciary Committee, but his legacy will live on for many years as all Americans continue to benefit from his legislative skill.

PORTUGAL TO HONOR HOLOCAUST HERO

HON. TONY COELHO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, as the only Portuguese American in Congress, it is with immense pride that I am able to announce that the Portuguese Government will posthumously award Dr. Aristides de Sousa Mendes do Amaral e Abranches its national medal of honor.

After 46 years of repudiation as an insubordinate bureaucrat, Dr. de Sousa Mendes will be rightfully returned to a place of dignity as a hero of the holocaust. You may be aware of the case of Dr. de Sousa Mendes, a Portuguese consular official in Bordeaux, France, who saved 30,000 Jews and others in 1940 by issuing them Portuguese visas so they could flee the oncoming Nazi invasion. Dr. de Sousa Mendes made a decision to save human lives at the risk of his own. Recalled to Lisbon by the Portuguese Government, he was removed from the diplomatic corps. Disgraced and forbidden to practice law, he was unable to make a living and died penniless in 1954.

His family never forgot his sacrifice, and their struggle to erase the damage done to his name, has not been in vain.

I commend the Portuguese Government for giving this issue the consideration it deserved. In particular, I want to thank Prime Minister Anibal Cavaco Silva, President Mario Soares, and Foreign Minister Pedro Miranda for their efforts in "righting" this "wrong."

House Joint Resolution 469, a resolution I introduced earlier this year to pay tribute to Dr. de Sousa Mendes for his selfless effort to save innocent lives, now has nearly 100 cosponsors. In view of Portugal's announcement, and the short time remaining in this session, I will introduce a new resolution next year with the expectation that its approval by Congress will coincide with Portugal's tribute to its newly recognized national hero.

It is my further pleasure to share with my colleagues this article that appeared in the Los Angeles Times.

FAMILY'S LONG QUEST ENDS HISTORICAL EXILE FOR HERO

(By Doug Smith)

Retired postal worker Sebastian Mendes of Saugus received a telephone call recently that signaled the fulfillment of an aching goal that has possessed him and his brothers and sisters most of their lives.

Theirs was a quest for honor that spanned four decades and followed the children of a Portuguese diplomat as they dispersed throughout the world after World War II. Today, five are dead; the remaining nine are growing gray with age.

They have waited and worked a lifetime for what they sought; the vindication of their father's slandered name.

The call last month brought word from a congressman's office in Washington that they had got it. The Portuguese government had agreed—after 46 years—to repudiate its condemnation of their father as an insubordinate bureaucrat and, instead, to honor him as a hero of the Holocaust.

Aristides de Sousa Mendes do Amarale e Abranches was the Portuguese consul to Bordeaux who defied his own country's orders in 1940 and granted passage out of France to thousands of Jews fleeing Nazi persecution. Some historians have compared his efforts to those of Swedish diplomat Raoul Wallenberg.

De Sousa Mendes paid dearly for his insubordination. Thrown out of the foreign service in disgrace, he died a pauper while the dictator he had disobeyed let others take credit for his good deeds.

Although the rest of the world eventually acknowledged De Sousa Mendes as the proper hero, the government of Portugal never formally erased the taint from his name. But that soon will change, thanks in part to the intercession of several members of Congress.

To celebrate their success, Sebastian Mendes and as many as three of his brothers will gather Oct. 20 at the Simon Wisenthal Center for Holocast Studies in West Los Angeles in a ceremony that will bring together some of the growing circle of friends who helped them.

The Mendes brothers expected to attend were among several of the diplomat's children who, dispossessed in their homeland, scattered to Belgium, Canada and the United States. Four settled in California, raised families. worked at careers, mourned the death of brothers and sisters and finally came to retirement age.

They never forgot.

At first they had used whatever small and ineffective devices they could muster from halfway around the world to rattle Portuguese dictator Antonio de Oliveira Salazar's regime, usually by asking local newspapers to print their story. This accomplished little.

"As long as Salazar was in power, nothing could be done," said the 10th of those children, Sebastian Mendes, 62.

He and his brother Carlos, 64, of Los Angeles had done nothing to ingratiate themselves with that regime. Both were Americans, having been born in Berkeley during their father's tour as consul there in 1943 they abandoned neutral Portugal to join the American Army for the European invasion.

After the war, Sebastian Mendes said, he traveled to Portugal briefly for a last visit with his parents, then ventured to America, where he discovered that his accounts of his father, steeped in European intrigue and retribution, found a no more receptive audience than did his thick accent.

In the 1950s, Sebastian Mendes wrote his father's story in a book, "How a Portuguese Hero Saved Thousands of Jews During World War II."

The book told a story that, although not widely known, has since been confirmed by historians of the Holocaust and Portuguese diplomatic papers.

It begins in Bordeaux in June, 1940, when frantic Jews and other refugees were streaming to the south of occupied France away from the Nazis. Their goal was Lisbon. As the Portuguese consul, De Sousa Mendes found thousands of people seeking visas to cross Franco's Spain on the escape route across the Pyrenees.

Requests for visas were supposed to be cleared by wire through the Portuguese national police, the PIDE. But, according to a later foreign ministry investigation, applicants "Waited in vain" for clearance "unless they had to do with individuals of 'pure race' or blue blood . . . in which case the permits came quickly."

Dictator Salazar had decided to stop issuing visas to Jews, according to the 1976 report of the foreign ministry.

Faced with this moral crisis, De Sousa Mendes chose conscience over obedience. He began issuing visas on demand to all refugees.

In his book "The Redemption of the Unwanted," historian Abram L. Sachar described the ordeal this led to: "Both the streets around the counsel's headquarters and around his home were overflowing with families who clamored for exit visas. De Sousa Mendes took as many into his home as could be accommodated until all rooms, staircases, floors and the roof and basement could hold no more.

"There De Sousa Mendes, his wife and children . . . all helped to prepare the scores of visas which De Sousa Mendes stamped hour by hour through three days until exhaustion compelled him to pause for rest."

Historian Yehuda Bauer called the marathon of visa writing "perhaps the largest rescue action by a single individual during the Holocaust."

Although the number of refugees who received visas from De Sousa Mendes during the three-day period cannot be documented, estimates run as high as 30,000, at least 10,000 of them Jewish.

It was over in three days. As quickly as possible, the foreign ministry sent a replacement to dispatch De Sousa Mendes home. There he was stripped of his diplomatic title, forced into retirement without compensation and barred from practicing his profession of law. He slipped gradually into poverty.

Sebastian Mendes, who was then just 20, remembers that refugees would come to the Mendes house in Cabanas de Viriato in rural Portugal and "applaud my parents in the street."

De Sousa Mendes never renounced his decision, not even in the face of disgrace and poverty. Upon his death in 1954, he was forgotten in his homeland, but not by his children.

Their first real glimmer of hope was not to come until 1967, and then from Israel rather than Portugal or the United States.

Receiving testimony from Jews who escaped through his help, Yad Vashem, the Israeli Martyrs and Heroes Remembrance Authority, placed Mendes among the Righteous Gentiles "who sacrificed their personal security to save the lives of the innocent."

Despite that recognition, the Mendes family found no reception in Portugal, where the Salazar regime was growing ever more repressive. Salazar died in 1970. His regime hung on until the revolution of 1974.

Elisa Joana, one of the Mendes children who remained in Portugal, pressed the new democratic government to reexamine her father's story.

In June, 1976, an officer of the foreign ministry turned in a meticulously documented report concluding that De Sousa Mendes had been illegally punished for an act of insubordination that had ultimately brought recognition to his country.

The author reported that, after the praise had begun to come forth, Salazar still rejected his 1945 appeal for reinstatement and allowed loyal diplomats to take credit for the shepherding of refugees.

The report spoke of the "profound disillusionment" that the Mendes family suffered and recommended that the government immediately consider the posthumous reinstatement of De Sousa Mendes and the "reparation of damages, material and moral, which were unjustly caused by the ministry for foreign affairs."

Today there are conflicting opinions about why those recommendations were not followed. De Sousa Mendes' sons believe that Salazar holdouts in the ministry were able to bury the report.

Luis de Sousa, press counselor at the Portuguese Embassy in Washington, conceded that the case has been "gathering dust," but denied that this was through any ill intent.

The resistance finally began to break last year. Elisa Joana Mendes got the story into the Capital, a Lisbon newspaper. Several American newspapers picked up the story. Then the American Congress stepped in.

Another of Sebastian's brothers, 55-year-old Oakland draftsman John Abranches, was introduced to Rep. PETE STARK (D-Alameda), who read a statement of praise for De Sousa Mendes into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

This spring the story came to the attention of Rep.Tony Coelho (D-Fresno), who said it touched his pride as the first Portuguese-American elected to Congress.

Coelho and Rep. Henry A. Waxman (D-Los Angeles) pushed a resolution of praise for De Sousa Mendes through Congress this summer. And in August, they sent a letter, signed by 70 congressmen, to Portuguese President Mario Soares, urging him to honor the diplomat.

The case to a rapid conclusion last month. On an official visit to the United States, Portugese Prime Minister Anibal Antonio Cavaco Silva and Foreign Minister Pedro Pires de Mirando sought Coelho out for discussions on other topics. Coelho said he told them he had only one item on his mind—the De Sousa Mendes case.

Several days later, Coelho was told President Soares had promised to give De Sousa Mendes an award.

What award it will be and when it will be given have not yet been decided, said a Portuguese Embassy official.

Whatever the medal, the meaning is clear. After 46 years, De Sousa Mendes will finally be a hero in his own land.

Recently, in his Saugus town house, surrounded by Dali-like paintings, thick books and other objects d'arts that subtly recalled the postal clerk's background as a European intellectual, white-haired Sebastian Mendes mused on the end of his quest.

"It's like it's finally coming to an end and it's all been good news," he said. "Now we're waiting to know when we will go there to accept it."

He broke momentarily into tears when told that his name had appeared in a short 1943 article in The Times reporting on his leaving Portugal to join the American Army. It was one more scrap of evidence that Mendes is a name of honor.

THE CARTER PRESIDENTIAL CENTER

HON. RICHARD RAY

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, on October 1, the new Carter Presidential Center in Atlanta was dedicated, and President Reagan was the featured speaker. The President's remarks were very appropriate for the occasion, and his words were conciliatory toward former President Carter with whom he has had many differences.

I want to insert in the record the text of President Reagan's speech and call my colleagues' attention to it. It is a beautiful tribute that was well received by its Georgia audience last week.

The speech follows:

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT AT THE DEDICATION OF THE CARTER PRESIDENTIAL CENTER

The PRESIDENT. President and Mrs. Carter, Reverend Clergy, Governor, Mr. Mayor, the distinguished guests here, ladies and gentlemen, I want you to know that I often get invited to library dedications. There aren't that many people still around who knew Andrew Carnegie personally. (Laughter.) But President Carter and Mrs. Carter, it is indeed an honor for Nancy and me to be here. None of us today need feel any urge, in the name of goodwill, to downplay our differences. On the contrary. In a certain sense we can be proud of our differences, because they arise from goodwill itself—from love of country, for concern for the challenges of our time, from respect for, and yes, even outright enjoyment of, the democratic processes of disagreement and debate.

Indeed, from the time of Thomas Jefferson and Alexander Hamilton, frank debate has been a part of the tradition of this republic. Today, our very differences attest to the greatness of out nation. For I can think of no other country on Earth where two political leaders could disagree so widely, yet come together in mutual respect. (Applause.) To paraphrase Mr. Jefferson: We are all Democrats, we are all Republicans, because we are all Americans. (Applause.)

Now, it occurs to me after the tour that Nancy and I just completed, that in dedicating the Carter Presidential Center, we have set ourselves no easy task. To name just a few of the Center's aspects, there are facilities for organizations that will address President Carter's special concerns, such as human rights, and some 27 million documents that scholars will be poring over for decades to come.

Of course, the Carter Presidential Center will mean something different for each of the millions who will visit it and benefit from it each year. But going through the Jimmy Carter Library just now, and admiring the many photographs and films, it struck me that perhaps the central gift that this Center will give to the nation is a story—a story of one man's life—a story that is distinctively American.

In one of its aspects, the story of President Carter is the story of the family in which he grew up. Jimmy Carter's father taught him the virtues of hard work and self-discipline: From the time he was six, he knew that when the farm bell rang, James Earl, Sr. expected to see him out of bed and going to work with everybody else.

President CARTER. Amen. (Laughter.)

The PRESIDENT. He and his sisters and brother—Gloria, Ruth, and Billy—gave each other strength and support, Ruth especially providing counsel through all the long years, all the joys and disappointments, until her death in 1983. He misses her still, as do all who knew her.

Miss Lillian, Miss Lillian who went to work for the Peace Corps in India at the age of 69. Miss Lillian taught Jimmy Carter charity and justice. She taught him to care for all, regardless of race, especially those weaker and less fortunate than himself. And she taught him to laugh. Surely, Mr. President, James Earl, Sr., Ruth, and your precious mother, Miss Lillian, are with us today as we dedicate this Center in honor of one who loved you so much.

In another of its important aspects, the story of President Carter is a story of the South. For when Jimmy Carter was born on this date in 1924, many southerners knew only poverty, and millions lived lives that were separate and unequal because of the color of their skin. There's a photograph inside the Library that sets the scene—A little boy is drinking from a fountain—he is black. He's drinking from that particular fountain because on a tree next to the fountain there's a sign that reads: "Colored."

Well, the world has changed now. It has changed because men and women like Jimmy Carter stood up in church to protest the exclusion of black people from worship. And it has changed because Jimmy Carter spoke those words in his inauguration address as Governor of Georgia: "I say to you quite frankly that the time for racial discrimination is over . . . No poor, rural, weak, or black person should ever again have to bear the additional burden of being deprived of the opportunity for an education, a job, or simple justice." (Applause.)

That old world has been replaced by a new South, a South that combines the best regional traditions of pride and hospitality with a new sense of openness and opportunity for all. For at the same time they were combatting discrimination, Southerners like Jimmy Carter were hard at work, applying new techniques to farming, opening new businesses, and encouraging new industry. And in so doing, they were expanding economic opportunity and raising levels of education at historic rates. One need only look at Atlanta—bustling, prosperous Atlanta—to see that the South has truly risen again, transformed, self-confident, moving vigorously on to still greater justice and opportunity.

So, in dedicating this Center today, I want to express what all of us feel today in this beautiful Georgia landscape: That this celebration is in a sense a celebration of the South—the new South that Jimmy Carter helped to build. (Applause.)

Yes, yours is a powerful story of family and region—yet for all that, Mr. President, I cannot help thinking that in perhaps its most important regard, yours is a story of dedication to so many of the fundamental values that made our nation flourish, and grow great. Certainly the value of hard work is apparent throughout your life. There were those early days of manual labor on the family farm; then came the years in the Navy, working for a man never known for being an easy task-master, Captain, later Admiral, Hyman Rickover.

Jimmy Carter distinguished himself under Captain Rickover for his application to duty—for using his gifts, in particular, his superb intelligence—to the utmost. He would likewise distinguish himself when he returned to the family farm and expanded it, again in his early political life as State Senator and Governor, and perhaps most dramatically in those two grueling years during which he made political history, going from "Jimmy Who?" to use the cartoonists' phrase, to 39th President of the United States. (Applause.)

Beyond hard work there are the values of perseverance, loyalty, and family—I've already mentioned the family in which President Carter grew up, but of course I must mention the family he and Rosalynn raised. And as a grandfather myself, I can't resist pointing out that the Carters' four children have been joined by four grandchildren.

And then there's perhaps the most basic value of all, the value of faith—faith that endures, faith that gives strength and consolation and joy. President Carter is above all a man of faith; time and again throughout his life, at moments great and small, President Carter has turned to prayer.

When he learned that President Kennedy had been assassinated, Jimmy Carter knelt outside the farm warehouse in prayer. When he became President himself, it was prayer that sustained him. He knew that—well, he new what I have learned myself—that, as Lincoln put it, the burdens of the highest office in the land would be intolerable without the help of the Almighty. (Applause.) And I wouldn't be surprised to learn that when he got up this morning, President Carter said a prayer of thanks for all that would happen on this day. So it is that when we dedicate this Center, Mr. President, we dedicate an institution that testifies, as does your life itself, to the goodness of God, and to the blessings He bestows upon those who do their best to walk with Him. I can think of no greater gift that you could make to our Nation.

Well, I must thank you once again, Mr. President, for inviting us to be here today. It has been a high honor indeed. I'm afraid we won't be able to linger after the program is concluded. Congress is still in session, and, as you know, somebody has to keep an eye on them. (Laughter.) So, I wonder whether I might close now with a few personal words—words, if you will, from one President to another.

Mr. President, you and Rosalynn know that the White House is a place that resonates with history, with memories. And as you know, Mr. President, these White House images, these memories, provide hope and inspiration to anyone who lives there. They remind him that he has examples of greatness to live up to. And they let him know that, whatever challenges he faces, others have faced challenges like them.

And I must tell you, Mr. President, that your countrymen have vivid memories of your time in the White House still. They see you working in the Oval Office at your desk with an air of intense concentration, repairing to a quiet place to receive the latest word on the hostages you did so much to free, or studying in your hideaway office for the meeting at Camp David that would mark such a breakthrough for peace in the Middle East. Others will speak today, Mr. President, of all phases of your political career and your policies.

For myself, I can pay you no higher honor than to say simply this: You gave of yourself to this country, gracing the White House with your passion and intellect and commitment. And now you have become a permanent part of that grand old house, so rich in tradition, that belongs to us all. For that, Mr. President, I thank you, and your country thanks you.

And there is only one thing left to say. From the 40th President to the 39th, happy birthday. (Applause.)

And, Mr. President, if I could give you one word of advice: Life begins at 70. (Laughter and applause.)

Thank you all. God bless you all. (Applause.)

THE INTERCOLLEGIATE ATHLETE AT RISK

HON. ALTON R. WALDON, JR.

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. WALDON. Mr. Speaker, last week as a part of the Congressional Black Caucus Weekend I had the pleasure of convening a workshop entitled "The Intercollegiate Athlete at Risk." The excellent panel which gathered included Coach Lenny Wilkens of the Cleveland Cavaliers, Commissioner Robert Moorman of the Central Intercollegiate Athletic Association, Valerie Thomas of the NFL Players Association, Robert J. Minnix, an investigator with the National Collegiate Athletic Association, Coach Hank Ford of Hampton University, Coach Chuck Granby of Andrew Jackson High School in Cambria Heights, NY., Brig Owens of the NFL Players Association, and Anthony Cotton, a sportswriter with the Washington Post. I would at this time like to share with my colleagues some of my remarks and highlights of the conference.

College sports represents many of the good attributes which are America. The spirit of amateur competition at its best happens here on our campuses. Young men and women pursue exellence daily, developing their strength and physical skills. These young people become our heroes as we celebrate the victories and share the suffering in their defeats. Their winning and losing seems so pure for we know most play for the love of the game and for the opportunity to be among the best.

Our colleges and universities represent excellence. We maintain our strength as a country because of the training our schools provide. It is no surprise that the pursuit of scholastic excellence should occur where athletic superiority is pursued. For a sound mind and a sound body is truly the best combination.

For many of today's athletes the pursuit of excellence on the playing field and the pursuit of excellence in the classroom are conflicting directly with one another. The resulting effect being that many of today's college athletes are inadequately prepared for life following their college careers. The obstacles to obtaining an education are numerous, ranging from social pressures to the time pressures of competing in the world of intercollegiate sports. One college football coach was quoted as saying that "athletic scholarships are based on need, if I need him then he gets the scholarship". If this is the prevalent attitude then it should be no surprise that the young athlete regards his sport as his first priority and the classroom as a distant second.

For many, the dramatic death of Len Bias will serve as a byproduct of the current state of intercollegiate athletics. His death from a cocaine overdose forced much attention on the issue of drug abuse and the abuse of our college athletes. Upon closer examination of the Len Bias case we see that he was flunking three courses in his final semester at the University of Maryland. Some say that he was doing relatively well for he was only 21 credit hours short of graduation.

Where does the black college athlete stand in the current state of college athletics? For black America our excellence at sports has been undeniable. Many talented young black people are highlighted as sports heroes on our college campuses and deservingly so. When they reach the college ranks they have worked hard, developed their natural skills, and risen to the top. These young people have the chance to hone their skills and perhaps earn a living playing professional sports but if the pros are not in their future they have earned the opportunity to gain an education as an athlete on scholarship. Now we approach the dilemma. Too many intercollegiate athletes are not being allowed to gain that education but instead are used for their talents. The black college athlete is a pawn.

Big time college sports means money. Big money. The 64 teams in the NCAA men's basketball tournament made a total of $22 million. College football teams earned $41 million from bowl games. The University of Michigan from sports earned total revenues of $15 million. And there are the upfront benefits to a university. Doug Flutie brought Boston College not only $10 million but as a result of the positive publicity he generated, admissions applications increased by 25 percent.

These numbers make the talented college athlete a valuable commodity. The schools enhance their coffers and their reputations through their sports programs. But they are truly putting the intercollegiate athlete at risk.

During the workshop, the panelists focused on what can be done to help our intercollegiate athletes overcome the obstacles that stand in their way under the present system. Until changes are made within the current system a solid support structure for the young athlete to obtain the proper advice must be developed. This guidance must be there for the athlete from the time the athlete becomes aware that he/she has a special talent. The athlete needs guidance and support in order to avoid becoming a victim of their sport.

The panel agreed that a black youngster is at a disadvantage from the outset due to an absence of readily available guidance. The illusion and realities that the college recruiter presents to student, parents, and coaches is appetizing. The possible material rewards for all involved, especially the recruiting university, pale the benefits of scholarship and maintaining the rules which have been established by the NCAA.

There has been a breakdown in the traditional support systems available to black youth. In the past the family, the church, guidance counseling, and community organizations have served as a structural support system for youngsters such as the athletes we are concerned about. Currently these traditional support vehicles have proved to be inadequate and disadvantageous to the young black athlete. Surrogate guidance can be provided, however with the stakes so high and those involved coming from different levels of sophistication different avenues of advise must be open. Those giving the guidance must be educated regarding the recruitment practices of the college coaches and be able to spot situations where the athlete will be used as a tool of the college or university. They must be aware of all the potential obstacles that can stand in their way from them receiving what they deserve as outstanding and accomplished athletes

The current educational system is inadequately preparing young black people. This is a national problem which is only highlighted by the black intercollegiate athlete. We must strive not only for our athletes but all black youth to receive a proper education so that they will be able to compete academically with their fellow students when they move on to college.

When the individual needs of the athlete were discussed the panel continually came back to the general social needs of youth particularly in black America. Adequately educating our young is central to addressing many of our social concerns as evidenced by our discussion. One young woman in the audience who had attended the University of Maryland in the mid 1970's asked why were these issues so talked about today when the same problems were evident during her college days. She stated that it was a shame that tragedy must occur before problems are addressed.

In 1929, the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching issued a report deploring "commercialized sports" on college and university campuses. Along with specific recommendations, the report urged the schools to remember that their primary mission was to serve the country as an "exponent of its highest intellectual life." I don't believe our schools of higher education have abandoned this cause but they have to be realistic about the profits available from their sports programs. These profits do pay for libraries, dormitories, science labs, and other capital needs of an educational institution.

THE COMMON SENSE IN GOVERNMENT PURCHASING ACT

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, as we all know too well, the Federal Government has a lot to learn about the way it buys products and services. One cannot pick up a newspaper or magazine or turn on a news program without learning about yet another story of how the Government has paid exorbitant prices for common products or how taxpayer dollars have been wasted on something that either doesn't work or far exceeds the actual Government needs.

There is a real problem with the way the Government goes about buying the products and systems it needs to carry out its required functions. While at times the Government has a particular need that can only be served with a specially designed product, Government agencies have become accustomed to having products and systems specially designed, with detailed specifications, instead of first looking to the commercial marketplace for products that can meet its requirements.

An example of these buying practices is the integrated circuit or microchip. The Government will buy some $2 billion worth of microchips this year with most of them manufactured to Department of Defense specifications. Those integrated circuits will cost between 3 and 10 times that of commercial chips without any appreciable increase in capability or reliability. Other such examples abound. It takes over 20 pages of specifications to buy hot chocolate and 17 pages of specifications to buy olives.

Unfortunately, these problems are not new. They have been created by a system that has been built piece by unorganized piece over the last 35 years. Regulations and procedures have been added a few at a time, often with the good intention of protecting the Government from a few unscrupulous contractors or a few incompetent or dishonest government purchasing officers. The system that has resulted, however, honors form over good management and business judgment. We have taken away the initiative of both contractors and government employees to seek the best value for the Government. Indeed, we have created a system in which only the most adventurous or, perhaps at times, only the most foolhardy dare participate.

These problems continue to exist today for a variety of reasons. We in Congress have not paid enough attention to them. Government procurement policymakers have not given them the management attention they require. We have not trained our procurement personnel in the proper procedures for buying commercial products. Indeed, we depend upon "competition by specification" rather than "competition by performance."

I am introducing legislation today that will help solve some of these problems and bring some common sense back into Government procurement. This legislation would require civilian Government contract personnel to look first to the commercial marketplace for the items they need to buy. It is very similar to a military procurement provision that was incorporated into the Department of Defense authorization bill for fiscal year 1987.

Now many of my colleagues may not consider this a revolutionary idea—and they are right. For at least the past 15 years, Government and industry reports and agency initiatives have all recommended that the Government make better use of the products in the commercial marketplace rather than relying on Government-written, detailed design specifications.

A comprehensive commercial product procurement policy can save the Government money, save the commercial vendors money, increase competition as more companies are willing to sell their products to the Government, decrease acquisition lead time and overhead costs, and increase product quality and capabilities as the latest proven technology is incorporated into commercial products at a far faster rate than the Government can write specifications.

I would like to say that my legislation is unnecessary. Unfortunately, I cannot. We have created a system where program managers and contract officers are more likely to make decisions based upon protecting their careers and avoiding publicity rather than obtaining the best value for the Government. After 15 years of reports and agency generated initiatives that have failed, I believe it is time Congress acted.

The basics of my legislation and the solution to some of these problems are straight forward. Each executive agency must comply with a two-step process in order to purchase the products it needs. First, the agency must define its requirements in such a way as to take advantage of commercial products and other nondevelopment items to the maximum extent practicable. This means that at the very beginning of the acquisition planning process, Government procurement officers must look to the commercial marketplace to determine if existing products can meet their needs. And if existing items cannot meet the stated needs, the Government procurement officers need to go back to the actual users to determine if the needs are correctly stated or to determine if maybe they can't be changed so that existing products can be used.

The second step is just as simple. Executive agencies are required to buy commercial and other nondeveloped items to the maximum extent practicable. This is not policy direction. This is not just hortatory language that the agencies can ignore. This is a positive mandate directing agency personnel to take advantage of a proven procurement method that will benefit both the Government and commercial vendors.

Once this legislation is enacted, what we will no longer see or hear about are the stories that involve 33 pages of detailed design specifications on how to make dehydrated potatoes that can be sold to the Government or 20 pages of specifications for Federal hot chocolate. With technology-based items involving computer technology and advanced electronics, the potential savings are even greater as the Government can eliminate much of the research, development, and testing costs it now pays for when buying products developed to government specifications.

Mr. Speaker, we can no longer afford to support a procurement system that does not incorporate the advantages of an existing and sophisticated commercial marketplace. We must begin now to retrain our government purchasing officers to depend on good management practices and commercial products and procedures. We will save money. We will encourage small and currently disinterested companies to begin competing for government business as the process is simplified. And we will buy products that work.

GAO DOES NOT AND SHOULD NOT HAVE ACCESS TO CIA CONFIDENTIAL FUNDS TRANSACTION RECORDS

HON. BOB STUMP

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, when the executive branch and the Congress established the Central Intelligence Agency after the Second World War, they recognized that the effective conduct of intelligence activities requires secrecy. In the laws establishing the CIA and providing its basic authorities, they took great care to provide for such secrecy, and subsequent legislation has preserved it. One critical aspect of that secrecy is protection of information relating to CIA financial transactions integral to sensitive intelligence activities. For this reason, the laws of the United States do not give the Comptroller General, who heads the General Accounting Office, a right of access to CIA financial transactions with confidential funds, a right to those laws grant to the intelligence committees of the Congress.

The subject of GAO access to records has arisen in the context of title II of the Military Construction Appropriations Act, as incorporated in the Continuing Appropriations Resolution, 1987, which provides for a program of $100 million in assistance to the Nicaraguan Democratic Resistance. Title II permits the President to designate the agency or agencies which will administer the $100 million. If the President designates, for example, the Department of State or the Agency for International Development to administer all or part of the program funds, the GAO will have access to the financial transactions and related records for that portion. If the President finds it necessary for the success of the program to designate the CIA to administer all or part of the aid program funds, the GAO will not have access to those financial transactions and related records to the extent that the CIA receives the funds by transfer and expends them as confidential funds under section 8(b) of the CIA Act. The intelligence committees of the Congress will, however, have full access to those transactions and records. Consequently, if the President designates the CIA to administer the funds for support of the Nicaraguan Democratic Resistance, then the intelligence committees of the Congress, and not the GAO, will perform the role of oversight of CIA use of and accounting for the funds.

The Congress addressed the secrecy of intelligence activities in the statute creating the CIA. Section 102(d)(3) of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 403(d)(3)) provided that "the Director of Central Intelligence shall be responsible for protecting intelligence sources and methods from unauthorized disclosure." As the Supreme Court has stated, with this provision "Congress vested in the Director of Central Intelligence very broad authority to protect all sources of intelligence information from disclosure." (CIA v. Sims, No. 83-1075, slip op. 9 (1985))

Two years later, the Congress enacted the Central Intelligence Agency Act of 1949 (50

U.S.C. 403a et seq.), providing the administrative and financial authorities that CIA needed to conduct its activities effectively, such as the authority to transfer to and receive from other agencies funds free from restrictions on the appropriations from which the funds are transferred. The CIA Act contained provisions for maintaining the secrecy of CIA activities, including specifically the secrecy of CIA financial transactions. Section 6 of the CIA Act provides that:

The Agency shall be exempted from [a repealed act] and the provisions of any other laws which require the publication or disclosure of the organization, functions, names, official titles, salaries, or numbers of personnel employed by the Agency.

Section 8(a) of the CIA Act provides that:

Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, sums made available to the Agency by appropriation or otherwise may be expended for purposes necessary to carry out its functions

And section 8(b) provides that:

The sums made available to the Agency may be expended without regard to the provisions of law and regulations relating to the expenditure of Government funds; and for objects of a confidential, extraordinary, or emergency nature, such expenditures to be accounted for solely on the certificate of the Director and every such certificate shall be deemed a sufficient voucher for the amount therein certified.

In commenting in 1948 on a draft of the CIA Act, the Comptroller General acknowledged the importance of maintaining strict secrecy in CIA activities. Then-Comptroller General Lindsay Warren stated that:

While [the procurement, funds transfer, and confidential funds sections] of the proposed enactment provide for the granting of much wider authority than I would ordinarily recommend for Government agencies generally, the purposes sought to be obtained by the establishment of the Central Intelligence Agency are believed to be of such paramount importance as to justify the extraordinary measures proposed therein. The importance of obtaining, correlating, and disseminating to proper agencies of the Government intelligence relating to national security under present international conditions cannot be overlooked. In an atomic age, where the act of an unfriendly power might, in a few short hours, destroy, or seriously damage the security, if not the existence of the nation itself, it becomes of vital importance to secure, in every practicable way, intelligence affecting its security. The necessity for secrecy in such matters is apparent and the Congress apparently recognized this fully in that it provided in section 102(d)(3) of Public Law 253, that the Director of Central Intelligence shall be responsible for protecting intelligence sources and methods from unauthorized disclosure." (B-74185, Mar. 12, 1948).

Taken together, the National Security Act provision for the protection of intelligence sources and methods, the CIA Act provision exempting CIA organization, functions, and personnel data from laws requiring disclosure, and the CIA Act provision for CIA confidential funds—also occasionally called unvouchered funds or certificated funds—provide clear authority for secrecy in the conduct of intelligence operations, including the secrecy of CIA financial transactions with confidential funds. With respect to CIA financial transactions with confidential funds under section 8(b) of the CIA Act, the secrecy for which the law provides excludes the GAO from access to the transactions and related records.

The Comptroller General's authorities and responsibilities concerning financial records of Federal agencies stem from several sections of title 31 of the United States Code. Section 712 of title 31 contains a general direction to the Comptroller General to "investigate all matters related to the receipt, disbursement, and use of public money;" to "analyze expenditures of each executive agency the Comptroller General believes will help Congress decide whether public money has been used and expended economically and efficiently;" and to "make an investigation and report ordered by either House of Congress or a committee of Congress having jurisdiction over revenue, appropriations, or expenditures." As a general matter, to the extent that this direction to the Comptroller General might be construed to carry with it an implied instruction to Federal agencies to disclose information to the Comptroller General, section 102(d)(3) of the National Security Act and sections 6 and 8 of the CIA Act provide the authority under which, should the secrecy essential to the success of intelligence activities so require, the Director of Central Intelligence could decline to provide information requested by the Comptroller General on the basis of section 712. In any event, because Congress has legislated very specifically with respect to GAO access to CIA confidential funds transactions under section 8(b) of the CIA Act, the general provisions of section 712 would not govern that specific issue.

Section 3523(a) of title 31 provides: "Except as specifically provided by law, the Comptroller General shall audit the financial transactions of each agency." Section 8(b) of the CIA Act, especially when considered together with section 102(d)(3) of the National Security Act and section 6 of the CIA Act constitutes a law providing otherwise, so that the GAO auditing requirement of section 3523(a) does not apply to CIA confidential funds transactions under section 8(b).

Similarly, with respect to government unvouchered funds transactions, section 3524(a)(1) of title 31 provides:

The Comptroller General may audit expenditures, accounted for only on the approval, authorization, or certificate of the President or an official of an executive agency, to decide if the expenditure was authorized by law and made. Records and related information shall be made available to the Comptroller General in conducting the audit.

However, section 3524(d) provides that section 3524 "does not * * * affect the authority under section 8(b) of the Central Intelligence Agency Act of 1949 (50 U.S.C. 403j(b))." Thus, section 3524 does not permit the General Accounting Office to audit CIA confidential funds transactions under section 8(b) of the CIA Act.

Section 716(a) of title 31 provides:

Each agency shall give the Comptroller General information the Comptroller General requires about the duties, powers, activities, organization, and financial transactions of the agency. The Comptroller General may inspect an agency record to get the information. This subsection does not apply to expenditures made under section 3524 or 3526(e) of this title.

The inartfully drafted reference to section 3524 makes section 716 inapplicable insofar as it might otherwise require the CIA to give the Comptroller General information or access to records concerning CIA confidential funds transactions under section 8(b) of the CIA Act.

Section 716(c) of title 31 authorizes the Comptroller General in certain circumstances to bring a civil action in Federal district court to enforce his subpoena for Federal agency records, but section 716(d)(1) provides that the Comptroller General may not sue to enforce his subpoena if the record sought "related to activities the President designates as foreign intelligence or counterintelligence activities." thus, section 716 would not permit the Comptroller General to sue in Federal district court to enforce a subpoena he issued seeking records relating to CIA confidential funds transactions under section 8(b) of the CIA Act.

Although the congress has determined by law that the GAO should not have access to CIA confidential funds transactions under section 8(b) of the CIA Act, those transactions remain subject to strict controls. The CIA Office of Finance develops and implements systems to account for all CIA funds, maintains the records and accounts of CIA financial operations, and performs audits. Independently within the CIA, the CIA Office of Inspector General conducts financial and program audits of CIA components, including program audits pursuant to audit standards set by the Comptroller General. In these audits, the CIA Office of Finance and the Office of Inspector General have access to CIA financial records, including confidential funds transactions under section 8(b) of the CIA Act and related records.

While the Congress recognized that the secrecy essential to intelligence activities required that GAO not have access to CIA confidential funds transactions under section 8(b) of the CIA Act, the Congress also recognized that, given the extraordinary nature of intelligence activities, occasions might arise in which the necessities of good government require that an authority external to the CIA review such transactions. Thus, in the very statute in which Congress made clear that the GAO would not have access to section 8(b) confidential funds transaction information (31 U.S.C. 3424), the Congress provided that:

Information about * * * a financial transaction under section 8(b) of the Central Intelligence Agency Act of 1949 (50 U.S.C. 403j(b)) may be reviewed by the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House and the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate.

Thus, the two Intelligence Committees of the Congress enjoy clear and full authority to review CIA confidential funds transactions under section 8(b) of the CIA Act, should they find it necessary to do so.

The statutory scheme established by the Congress with respect to access to CIA confidential funds transactions excludes the GAO from such access but permits the intelligence committees of the Congress to act as an external review authority. This system properly accommodates two compelling governmental interests: maintenance of the secrecy essential to intelligence activities and proper accountability for public funds.

KILDEE HONORS COURT STREET UNITED METHODIST CHURCH ON ITS 150TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of my distinguished colleagues in the House of Representatives and to the Nation a celebration that will be held October 12 through 19, 1986, in Flint, MI. Through these dates, the Court Street United Methodist Church of Flint is observing its 150 years of service.

Added to the State Register of Historic Sites in 1979, the Court Street United Methodist Church is the oldest organized church in Flint. In the early 1830's the church's founder, Rev. Wiliam Brockway, came to Flint once a month to preach. His first sermons were held in the Wait Beach Bar and later in the Stage and Wright store. In 1836, Reverend Brockway assisted in the founding of the Flint River Mission. Later, the mission was to become the Court Street United Methodist Church. In 1841, trustees of the church sought land in order to erect their first building. They procured two lots on the corner of Court and Church Streets, still the site of the church today. Their first building was completed in 1844. The new church building became a meeting place for both civic and religious functions but, unfortunately, on March 19, 1861, the church and its contents were destroyed by fire.

With everlasting faith, members of the church managed to gather enough funds to build a new and larger building which was completed in August of 1861. By 1888, however a larger church was needed because of growing membership. A larger church was completed 1 year later but remained intact for only 3 years. Another fire ravaged the church and nearly destroyed it.

The fourth and present church was built in 1893. At the time of its completion the church was capable of seating more than 10 percent of the Flint population. In 1929, the church added a school room, a gymnasium, and a caretaker's apartment to benefit the growing congregation.

The Court Street United Methodist Church has helped keep the faiths and hopes of its congregation alive through the pioneer settlements, several wars, the birth of General Motors in Flint, and the Great Depression. Through its 150 years in existence, the church has faithfully served its parishioners and the community in a very unselfish and admirable manner.

Mr. Speaker, the Court Street United Methodist Church and its members continue to be a pillar in our society. It is with great honor that I pay tribute to this very fine religious institution on the occasion of its 150th anniversary.

TRIBUTE TO RABBI BERNHARD H. ROSENBERG

HON. JOSEPH J. DioGUARDI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. DioGUARDI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Rabbi Bernhard H. Rosenberg, who is an outstanding member of the community, and was recently honored at Yeshiva University.

Rabbi Rosenberg's educational background began at Yeshiva University where he graduated from the Rabbinical School. He later went on to receive two master's degrees from Yeshiva and is currently a doctoral candidate there. He is an expert in his field and a well known author and spokesman.

Rabbi Rosenberg has had a very significant impact on the Midchester Jewish Center. Through his hard work and dedication, he has been able to double the membership in the last 5 years. Currently, Rabbi Rosenberg is a member of the Rabbinical Council of America, the New York Board of Rabbis and the Westchester Holocaust Commission. He is also special assistant to Westchester County Executive Andrew O'Rourke and the police chaplain of the Metropolitan Police Conference of the State of New York. In addition, he is a representative for Yonkers to the President's Holocaust Committee. He founded the Hebrew Academy Day School of Yonkers and has served as chaplain at the Albert Einstein Medical Hospital, Peekskill Community Hospital, as well as a number of Geriatric Centers.

Rabbi Rosenberg has devoted his life to serving others. As a family man, a member of the clergy and a prominent member of the community, he is truly a model citizen and should be recognized for his efforts, as he was at Yeshiva University. I would like to take this time to pay a much deserved tribute to Rabbi Bernhard Rosenberg.

NAACP FREEDOM FUND DINNER

HON. PETER W. RODINO, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, it will be my great honor to be a guest at the 72d Annual NAACP Freedom Fund Dinner in Newark on October 24. The dinner will take place at the Quality Inn and will feature the Honorable Sharpe James, mayor of Newark, as guest speaker.

This dinner will be a special occasion for me and for the many Newark residents who care deeply about justice and equality. It will be a time to reflect on the gains we have made—the landmark Civil Rights Acts, the Voting Rights Act and extension, designation of Martin Luther King, Jr.'s birthday as a national holiday, passage of sanctions against the South African Government. It will be a time to recall the difficult struggles—marches, arrests, sit-ins—necessary to bring about these gains. We will celebrate the warm friendships forged in those difficult days and recommit ourselves to meeting the challenges that lie ahead—challenges posed by those in the Reagan administration who seek to turn back the clock on civil rights and return to the constitutional "dark ages."

Mr. Speaker, I salute civil rights champions like Ezella Johnson and Sally Carroll, chairpersons of the Freedom Fund Dinner; Keith Jones, president, Newark NAACP; John Woods, first vice president; Delores Carter, second vice president, Daisy Stokes, secretary; Denise McCoy, assistant secretary; Mamie Hale, treasurer—all of the Newark branch of the NAACP.

Mr. Speaker, it is a great privilege and pleasure to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the NAACP, of which I am proudly a lifetime member, and to its many activists, in Newark, and throughout our great land.

Thanks to their hard work and devotion to justice and equality, this Nation will remain a place where all of its citizens are free to pursue and realize their dreams.

THE TAX REFORM ACT OF 1986

HON. ALFRED A. (AL) McCANDLESS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. McCANDLESS. Mr. Speaker, legislation, and the issues surrounding it, is seldom black or white. Most bills that we consider in the House of Representatives have good points and bad points. However, when it comes to the one vote on final passage, we must look through the shades of gray, and make a black or white decision. That was the case with H.R. 3838, the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

I have been a strong advocate of tax reform. Our tax system is so complex and bewildering that individuals are often forced to employ a tax attorney or accountant to correctly negotiate the jumbled array of IRS laws, regulations, and rulings. The effect has been to erode the voluntary compliance on which our system relies, and turn otherwise law-abiding citizens into law breakers, thereby increasing the burden on those who continue to meet their tax responsibilities.

Consequently, there are many provisions of H.R. 3838 that have my strong support, particularly the reduction in the marginal tax rates and the tough new minimum tax on corporations. In addition, the legislation will take 6 million of the Nation's working poor off the tax rolls. While our tax laws were never designed to tax low-income families, many of these people were added to the tax rolls over the years because of "bracket creep." President Reagan's Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 [ERTA] provided for the indexing of the tax tables and put an end to tax increases on individuals whose wages were merely keeping pace with inflation. H.R. 3838 takes the next step and eliminates the tax liability of the low-income victims of bracket creep.

Had the procedure allowed, I would have voted for those provisions and others. However, the procedure for final consideration of the tax bill before the House provided for only one vote—up or down—on the entire package. Therefore, H.R. 3838 had to be evaluated in its entirety.

When the President first proposed a reform of our tax laws, he said that the objectives were fairness, growth, and simplicity. Those are the standards, I told my constituents, by which I would evaluate and judge any tax reform package. After careful consideration and much deliberation, I reached the conclusion that H.R. 3838 did not meet those objectives, and that the negative features of the tax bill outweighed the positive. Consequently, I voted against H.R. 3838, and I would like to take this opportunity to outline some of my concerns about the legislation.

I. FAIRNESS

Retroactive provisions: As a matter of principle, I believe that changes in the law should be prospective—that is, effective in the future. Retroactive changes in the law should be avoided unless there is some compelling reason to do otherwise. Retroactive provisions have the effect of penalizing people for making decisions and relying on the current provisions of the law. As justification for retroactive effect, some argued that there were provisions and loopholes which should not have been a part of the Tax Code. That argument, however, ignores the fact that Congress put those provisions in the code and people, acting in good faith, relied on the law and made legal and binding commitments.

Among the retroactive provisions of the tax reform bill are the abrupt elimination of the Accelerated Cost Recovery System [ACRS] method of depreciation, the new "passive loss" rules that apply to real estate, and the elimination of the Investment Tax Credit [ITC], retroactive to January 1, 1986.

I am also very concerned about the retroactive changes in taxation of civil service and public employee retirement. It is simply not fair to our policemen, firemen, teachers, and other Federal, State, county, and city employees to retroactively change the rules under which they will receive their retirement benefits.

Consumer interest: H.R. 3838 eliminates the interest deduction for consumer credit. While I agree that the Tax Code should not encourage debt, I am concerned about the retroactive effect that the new law will have by eliminating the interest deduction for purchases already made. In addition, there is a question of priorities. The tax reform bill retains the interest deduction for second home mortgages. In view of the number of jobs and tax revenues that the second home industry generates in my congressional district and elsewhere, I believe that deduction is important and support its retention. However, that does raise the question of the priority of allowing a deduction for a second home, but not allowing a deduction for the family car or for a washing machine bought on an installment plan.

(C) Sales tax: It has long been the policy of the Federal Government that individuals should not have to pay tax on taxes paid to State and local governments. H.R. 3838 departs from that tradition and eliminates the deduction for sales tax. In effect, the tax bill establishes a Federal policy of favoring States which rely on income and property taxes, while discriminating against those States which rely on sales taxes as their chief source of revenue. All State taxes should be treated equally.

(D) Marriage penalty: Individuals should not be penalized with higher taxes just because they happen to be married. ERTA provided some relief in the form of the marriage penalty deduction. That deduction is eliminated by H.R. 3838.

(E) Transition rules: H.R. 3838 also contains some 300 "transition rules." A transition rule is nothing more than special consideration given to a particular taxpayer, while denying the benefit of that consideration to other taxpayers. In principle, I am opposed to transition rules. If such a large number of exceptions and transition rules are necessary, then perhaps we should not change the law. All should have to play by the same tax rules. It is not fair to include some under a transition rule while denying coverage to others.

Furthermore, it is both interesting and distressing to note that the benefits from the transition rules seem to be heavily distributed among the more senior members of the Senate Finance and House Ways and Means Committees. The price tag for the transition rules in H.R. 3838 is estimated to be $10 billion over the next 5 years. It will be very difficult for us to explain to our constituents why so many provisions and deductions important to them were eliminated while special interest provisions prevailed.

II. GROWTH

(A) IRA's: I am strongly opposed to the elimination of the deduction for Individual Retirement Account [IRA's] for most people. At a time when the U.S. savings rate is one of the lowest among the industrialized nations, it is ill-advised to remove one of the most successful incentives for people to save. IRA's not only encourage people to provide themselves with a source of retirement income, they also provide a source of capital formation, which is essential to business in the creation of new jobs. Furthermore, in one of the more onerous provisions of H.R. 3838, if both spouses work and one of them is covered by a pension plan, even if the other one is not, neither spouse would be eligible for an IRA.

(B) Pension plans: With regard to pension plans, particularly 401(k) plans, the Tax Reform Act of 1986 represents the fourth major change in the pension laws in the past 5 years. I am concerned that as a result of yet another change in conjunction with new limits on participation, many companies, particularly smaller ones, are likely to drop their plans altogether. That would have a devastating effect on savings and capital formation. Currently, 79 percent of all savings in this country is generated by business and not by individuals.

(C) Capital gains: Capital gains treatment, another key incentive for investment, capital formation, and the creation of new jobs, is also eliminated by H.R. 3838. The effect will be retroactive as assets must be held for a minimum of 6 months before qualifying for capital gains treatment. Consequently, assets which were acquired with the expectation of capital gains treatment, will be adversely and retroactively impacted. With a maximum marginal rate of 33 percent, the legislation represents a potential 61 percent increase over the current capital gains rate.

While we were told that the change was needed to raise revenue, history has shown that when Congress raises the capital gains rate, revenue decreases. When Congress has lowered the capital gains rate, revenues increase. One estimate of lost revenue caused by asset stagnation was $40 to $100 billion over the next 5 years.

The loss of capital gains treatment is combined with the failure of tax reform to provide for the indexing of the basis price of an asset. Without indexing, the increased value of an asset that is attributable to inflation is taxed as income. As an example of this inequity, if an individual purchased a house in 1975 for $50,000 and sold the house today for $90,000, according to the IRS, there would be a taxable gain of $40,000. (Under current law, the maximum tax on that gain would be $8,000; under H.R. 3838, the maximum tax would be $13,200.) The law and the IRS ignore the fact that a 1986 dollar is worth 49 cents in comparison to the purchasing power of a 1975 dollar. To keep pace with inflation, the homeowner would have to sell the home for over $100,000 just to break even. As it is, the homeowner must pay tax on what is, in reality, a loss. This is a problem in current law, and one which is compounded by the elimination of capital gains treatment by H.R. 3838.

(D) Real estate and housing: Changes in the treatment of real estate investments are estimated to cost that industry millions of dollars. While reforms in this area are needed, it must be acknowledged that additional taxes on real estate are likely to have two adverse effects: first, increased costs will be passed on to tenants in the form of increased rents; and second, fewer incentives to provide housing will result in less housing being made available.

There should be a distinction between "tax shelters" and legitimate economic real estate investments; however, H.R. 3838 provides for the same broad-brush treatment of all real estate investments, particularly with regard to "passive losses." Real estate owners and investors who materially participate in the management and operation of their real estate interests should be treated the same as material participants in other businesses. Losses that result from actual cash expenses should be deductible. Furthermore, the effect of these changes is retroactive as applied to existing investments.

(E) Farming: At a time when many American farmers are having a difficult time making ends meet, this legislation will have a particularly adverse impact on them. Two provisions of current law on which they rely, income averaging and the investment tax credit, are repealed. Becaused of the forces of nature, farmers' incomes fluctuate dramatically from 1 year to the next. Consequently, farmers often use income averaging to level their incomes from good years over bad ones. At the same time, many farmers have used the ITC to purchase expensive equipment and machinery.

(F) ITC and ACRS: Beyond farming, the repeal of the ITC will further cripple the ability of U.S. companies to compete in a highly competitive world market. The ITC and the ACRS method of depreciation have been used effectitively by U.S. industry to retool and expand, and in the process, create 10 million new jobs since 1982. I have grave reservations about repealing two key elements of the economic recovery.

III. SIMPLICITY

Unfortunately, the idea of simplifying the Tax Code was lost in the process. Without question, it will be simpler for those who will be dropped from the tax rolls. After all, it is simpler not to file a return than to file one, even if one files a short form or a form 1040 EZ. However, as I noted earlier, those people should not have been on the tax rolls in the first place. For those who must continue to file a return, there is no simplicity. Some have cited the reduction from 14 tax brackets to 2 as simplicity. That claim may be exaggerated as most people find it relatively simple to check a tax table once taxable income has been calculated. So from that perspective, it really does not matter that much how many brackets there are. Computations and calculations necessary to get to taxable income really have not been simplified.

In many respects, the new so-called two bracket tax is more complicated than the current rates. In 1987, there will be five brackets. Thereafter, there will be at least four rates—15, 38, 33, and back to 28. There will be added complications with the 5 percent surcharge, the phasing out of the 15 percent rate, and the phasing out of the personal exemption.

H.R. 3838 does not represent real tax reform or a replacement of the cumbersome current Tax Code, but adds another 1,000 pages to it. Together with the implementing regulations which will take years to promulgate, there will be a dramatic addition to the 33 lineal feet of bookshelf space currently needed to hold the Tax Code and IRS regulations.

IV. BUDGETARY IMPACT

Of an even stronger concern, is what H.R. 3838 will do to the effort to balance the federal budget. In surveying my district, and seeing the same results reflected in surveys around the country, the American people are much more concerned with the deficit and efforts to control it than they are with tax reform. While not perfect, and certainly not to everyone's complete satisfaction, Gramm/Rudman represents the last best hope that the Federal Government will balance the budget any time in the near future. The Gramm-Rudman Balanced Budget law sets a maximum deficit for the next 5 years, reducing the deficit by $36 billion each year, and resulting in a balanced budget in fiscal year 1991.

H.R. 3838 will provide an increase in Federal revenues of $11 billion in fiscal year 1987. Based on past history, Congress will use that amount to avoid any spending reductions needed to meet the fiscal year 1987 Gramm-Rudman deficit target of $144 billion. The real problem will come in fiscal year 1988 when revenues are expected to drop by $17 billion. The fiscal year 1988 Gramm-Rudman deficit target is $108 billion. The deficit reduction situation in fiscal year 1988 will be this:

	Billions
Gramm-Rudman reduction
($144—$108=$36)	$36
Revenue shortfall	17
To offset the non-reductions in fiscal year 1987	11
The amount of deficit reduction required in fiscal year 1988	64

If recent history is any sort of guide, it is safe to say that Congress is not going to reduce spending by $64 billion in a single year. That means one of two things will happen: (1) there will be a push to have massive tax increases in fiscal year 1988; and/or (2) that will be the end of Gramm-Rudman and any possibility of balancing the federal budget anytime in the near future. I do not regard either alternative as acceptable.

V. OTHER CONCERN.

H.R. 3838 represents the fourth major change in our tax laws in 5 years. No organization or business can engage in any necessary long-range planning in the face of constantly changing tax laws. There will be more changes as Congress will have to enact additional legislation embodying socalled technical corrections amendments in succeeding years to correct problems arising from this bill. Instead of rushing to pass this measure in the closing days of the 99th Congress, it would have been far more responsible to take the time necessary to work on the legislation until we had perfected it and eliminated the retroactive and abrupt changes in the Tax Code. A tax reform package of this magnitude should be phased in over a period of years, providing for a smooth transition, without retroactive provisions.

The general thrust of H.R. 3838 is a tax shift of $120 billion from the individual sector to the business sector. While I am a strong supporter of the principle that everyone should pay his fair share of tax, and for that reason, support the new minimum tax, it must be noted that ultimately, it will be the individual, as a consumer, that will pay the increased taxes in the form of increased prices. As a result of those increased prices, many businesses will face more exposure to foreign competition. With more money going to the government, there will be less money for modernization, expansion, and the creation of new jobs. Another result will be that business will be forced to borrow more money, which will likely drive up interest rates. It is cruel to promise a taxpayer a $10 to $20 a month reduction in personal income taxes when that same individual will have to pay more than that as a hidden tax in the form of increased rent and higher prices for consumer goods.

CONCLUSION

I would have liked to have been able to vote for the Tax Reform Act of 1986, but despite the hard work of many people, HR. 3838 was seriously flawed. It did not measure up to its goal of fairness, growth, and simplicity. It was a good beginning, but not a satisfactory finished product. Consequently, I did not vote for it. Congress could have done better and produced a true tax reform bill. Unfortunately, the sentiment of tax reform seemed stronger than substance.

OPPOSE THE SALE OF FORT DERUSSY

HON. NEIL ABERCROMBIE

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Mr. Speaker, the defense, Military Construction and Treasury/Postal Service portions of the continuing resolution passed by the Senate contain provisions that would direct the Department of Defense to sell the mauka—inland—portion of Fort DeRussy, Honolulu, HI to the State or local governments. I strongly urge that the House conferees oppose this provision in conference.

As you may know, the proponents of the sale of the mauka portion of Fort DeRussy are seeking to build a convention center, and perhaps other commercial developments, on the site.

There are a number of strong arguments against this course of action, but none are stronger than the effect on the morale of the U.S. Armed Forces of such a sale. Fort DeRussy is a former coast artillery installation located on beachfront property. It now serves as a rest and recreation center for members of the armed services stationed not only in Hawaii, but throughout the world.

These facilities, which include the Hale Koa Hotel—set aside for use by military personnel and their families—are vital to the maintenance of morale in the U.S. Armed Forces. Every year they host thousands of active duty and retired military personnel and their families. The Fort DeRussy complex provides a much needed and all too rare opportunity for those who serve our Nation in uniform to relax in a pleasant, wholesome atmosphere which promotes family togetherness and stability.

During the Vietnam war it served as a haven for countless troops on rest and recreation leave from the war zones of Southeast Asia. I am informed that more than 10,000 U.S. military personnel were married and/or honeymooned there during those years. The effect on morale if we were to undermine the integrity of Fort DeRussy with a convention center or commercial development could be devastating.

There is also the question of military readiness to be considered. Contrary to common misconceptions, the mauka portion of Fort DeRussy is currently being used as an operational U.S. Army facility. It serves as the headquarters of the IX Corps of the U.S. Army Reserve. IX Corps is the only corps-level headquarters for the U.S. Army in the entire Pacific-Asia area. The contemplated sale would force the relocation of this headquarters, a move which could seriously disrupt the ability of the Army to maintain a state of readiness and accomplish its mission.

In addition, the move would cost millions of dollars. There is already vociferous local opposition to the idea of the city or the State paying for the Fort DeRussy property. Under these circumstances there is no assurance that the Federal Government would not ultimately be asked to bear the cost.

Civilian residents of the area, it should be noted, are strongly opposed to the dismemberment of Fort DeRussy. At this time, relations between the Army and local civilians are excellent. But neighborhood residents are concerned that the sale would increase traffic—already heavily congested—in the area. Development of a convention center would make it a virtual gridlock.

The area in question is used jointly by military and civilian personnel. Numerous cultural and entertainment events, attracting both military and civilian participants, are held at Fort DeRussy. Sale of the mauka portion would adverely effect the capacity of the installation to continue hosting these events. For these reasons and others, the sale of Fort DeRussy would jeopardize the military-civilian harmony which has prevailed until now.

In addition, I believe it would be advisable for Congress to defer consideration of any legislation concerning the disposition of the Fort DeRussy property until after the November elections in order allow the people of the city and county of Honolulu to express their opinion on the question. An initiative proposal is on the ballot which would amend the Honolulu City charter to require that the area remain open space, a proposal obviously at variance with the plans now under consideration. Finally, the Armed Services Committee is considering holding hearings on the issue in December. Any decision on this matter should await consideration of testimony taken at that hearing.

It should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that among those organizations, both military and civilian, opposing the sale of Fort DeRussy, are:

AFL-CIO.
Waikiki Residents' Association.
Waikiki Neighborhood Board No. 9 (Chair: Wright Hiatt).
Honolulu Downtown Neighborhood Board (Chair: Ellie Kupau).

MARITIME DEFENSE COMMISSION

HON. JOHN R. McKERNAN, JR.

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. McKERNAN. Mr. Speaker, this country is faced with a dilemma, whether to preserve our shipbuilding industry, our merchant fleet and the maritime training institutions which represent equally important components of the U.S. merchant marine, or to let this "fourth arm of defense" continue its rapid decline.

It is crucial to understand that the United States is an island nation dependent upon the seas for defense, as well as trade; to understand that from a national security perspective, we need a strong merchant marine with the maritime manpower and mobilization base to back it up. I will not spell out the details of the frightening decline in numbers of U.S. ships and the diminishing share of the U.S. foreign trade carried on U.S.-flag vessels, nor will I dwell on specific reasons for this decline. Rather, I wish to bring to the attention of my colleagues a recent development which will help heighten the understanding of why a strong U.S. merchant marine is crucial to our national security. In particular, I refer to recent steps toward the creation of a commission to study the defense-related aspects of the merchant marine.

On October 19, 1984, the President signed legislation which established a commission to study the problems relating to the transportation of cargo for national defense purposes in time of war or national emergency and the capability of the U.S. merchant marine to provide this transportation.

Last Friday, the President forwarded to the Senate Armed Services Committee the names of those individuals nominated to be commissioners. In addition to the Secretary of the Navy and the Administrator of the Maritime Administration, who will cochair the Commission, those nominated to serve are: Adm. James Holloway, USN, retired, former Chief of Naval Operations and now president of the Council of American-Flag Operators; Shannon Wall, president of the National Maritime Union; William Haggett, president and CEO of the Bath Iron Works Corp.; Joseph Sewall, chairman of the board of trustees of the Maine Maritime Academy; and, Edward Carlson, chairman and CEO of United Airlines.

Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that two outstanding citizens from the State of Maine are among this group. Joe Sewall, president of the James W. Sewall Co., recently retired, after 15 years from the Maine State Senate where, for 8 years, be served as president. Over the years, he has served as trustee or director of various boards and organizations and is currently the chairman of the board of trustees of the Maine Maritime Academy, the foremost maritime training institution in the country. I believe that his knowledge of maritime issues and his government and organizational experiences will prove to be an invaluable contribution to the efforts of the Commission. Bill Haggett represents the largest private employer in my State, a shipyard recognized as a leader in the technological advancement of the U.S. shipbuilding industry—a reputation for which Bill deserves much of the credit for developing. He is a business leader in the State and beyond and, as chairman of the board of the Shipbuilders Council of America, brings a unique and valuable perspective to the Commission's work.

The decline in all segments of the maritime industry is alarming. Increasing foreign competition and continued pressures on our national budget have rendered impractical many of our current maritime policies. It is imperative that we begin to address this decline and develop effective strategies to ensure that our merchant marine remains a strong vital force. It is, therefore, essential that the Commission begin its task and I ask you to join me in urging the Senate to move expeditiously in confirming the nominations submitted by the President.

SHOULD WE LIFT THE POLISH SANCTIONS?

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, just as positive steps by the Government of South Africa would mitigate United States support for sanctions against South Africa, the recent release of political prisoners in Poland should be met with some measure of approval by our country. A lifting of U.S. sanctions against that country is one possible step. If the Polish-American Congress is right in saying that the Jaruzelski regime offered the amnesty because of the sanctions, then the sanctions may have served their purpose. Most importantly, as the editorial in the Lincoln Journal of October 5, 1986, points out, President Reagan is not the type of man who will shrink from need to reimpose the sanctions if necessary. While this Member is not yet convinced of the wisdom of a complete removal of sanctions, the Journal's editorial argues well for this proposal. I commend the editorial to my colleagues.

[From The Journal-Star, Oct. 5, 1986]

END THE POLISH SANCTIONS?

Before there were sanctions against South Africa, there were sanctions against Poland.

Now the question in Washington is whether the last of those sanctions should be lifted, restoring normal relations between the United States and Poland.

Several of the steps taken against the Warsaw government in 1981 after its crack down on the Solidarity trade-union movement and imposition of martial law have already been reversed in response to concessions by Poland. These include a ban on U.S. landing rights for Polish airlines and U.S. objection to Polish membership in the International Monetary Fund.

Now Poland's Communist leader, Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, has announced the release of 225 political prisoners. Is it time, then, to lift the ban on U.S. guaranteed credits to Poland and restore that country's most-favored-nation status in trade with the United States?

The Polish-American Congress and a number of congressional supporters of Poland say yes. Economic conditions forced the Jaruzelski government to grant the amnesty in hopes that the sanctions would be ended, they say. Their fear is that if their expectations are not fulfilled, the Communist leaders will slip back into more repressive measures.

That may, in fact, be already happening. Friday the Warsaw government declared illegal a council formed by former underground Solidarity activists and threatened them with imprisonment.

Some officials in the Reagan administration, however, caution against hasty action. In 1984, they point out, Poland rearrested 12 of 300 political prisoners who had been released. By retaining the last of the sanctions, they argue, Washington may be able to prevent another such retrogression.

Clearly, though, the United States has an interest other than the welfare of the Polish people in seeing their country alleviate its economic problems. Lifting the trade and credit restrictions would help Poland generate the foreign exchange necessary if it is to repay its $32 billion debt to Western banks. If U.S. sanctions remain, Washington could be made the scapegoat for Poland's continued economic decline.

President Reagan, as a hard-line anti-communist, is in a good position to offer a carrot to the Warsaw regime. No one could doubt that he would reimpose sanctions if Jaruzelski and company backslide.

But if Reagan wants more reassurance before acting, an opportunity is at hand. Warsaw is obviously influenced by Moscow. Let the president ask Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in Iceland next weekend whether Warsaw can be counted on to act appropriately if sanctions are ended.

VIOLATIONS OF HUMAN RIGHTS

HON. JOSEPH J. DioGUARDI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. DioGUARDI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to condemn the continued repression and forced assimilation of Turkish-Bulgarians by the Bulgarian Government. Once again human rights have been ignored and violated by a government behind the iron curtain.

One year ago I rose before the House and depicted the horrid conditions faced by this minority in Bulgaria. In the last year, there has been no progress toward freeing the Turkish-Bulgarians from the tight grip of tyrannical rule.

The problem at hand is not new. However, it has escalated in recent years. In 1947, minorities were allowed to preserve their culture through the teaching of their language and heritage. From that point, conditions deteriorated. By the early 1970's, the teaching of the Turkish language in Bulgarian schools had ceased. Turks protesting this decision were imprisoned immediately. In 1984, the Turks were devastated by the cold hearted tactics of the Bulgarian Government. At that time, the Bulgarian Government conducted a deplorable name changing campaign, forcing Turkish-Bulgarians to change their Turkish/Moslem names to Slavic/Christian names.

In present day Bulgaria, nearly 1 million people, 10 percent of the population, are Turkish. Nonetheless any display of Turkish culture results in arrest.

I once again call for an end to these gross violations of human rights. As the leader of the free world, it is our obligation to protect the rights of those individuals less fortunate than ourselves.

THE VOLUNTEER SERVICE PROMOTION ACT

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Volunteer Service Promotion Act of 1986. I am pleased that my colleagues PAT WILLIAMS and BILL GOODLING, from the Education and Labor Committee, are joining me as original sponsors of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, volunteering is a great American tradition. From covered wagon days to the present, the tradition of "neighbor helping neighbor" has been a cornerstone of our heritage.

Recognizing and promoting volunteer service is what this bill is all about. And it comes at a critical time. Given the cutbacks in governmental spending for many social services, the impending changes in the tax laws relating to charitable contributions and the increased incidence of poverty, there is a tremendous need for more volunteers.

Unfortunately, our society doesn't do enough to encourage volunteers. Often, they hardly even get thanked. And it's expensive to volunteer given today's high costs of transportation and insurance.

It's high time Congress did more to encourage and recognize the special contributions of volunteering Americans. And that's what this legislation would do.

Under our bill, volunteers in selected programs would be able to earn credits for their service. Any person over 65 could volunteer in exchange for a credit when they serve any other person over 65 or a low-income child. These credits could be accumulated and those earning them would have the option to use them for similar services for themselves and their families when needed.

No new Federal funds are needed to implement this bill and no new Federal bureaucracies are created. The bill requires the Administration on Aging to use existing funds to establish 5 to 15 volunteer service credit programs for elderly people under the Older Americans Act. Those programs would be operated by the State offices on aging, an established network of State agencies serving the elderly.

A particularly exciting aspect of the bill is that it would promote closer ties between the generations by allowing elderly people to earn credits by serving low-income children. For example, many communities are in desperate need of child care or tutors for disadvantaged youths and the elderly are in a unique position to be able to give these services.

Finally, the bill allows volunteers to donate their credits to others who are in greater need of the services they have earned. This will encourage capable individuals to volunteer in order that a family member or friend—as well as the person directly receiving their services—could benefit.

Mr. Speaker, volunteers—specifically elderly volunteers—are a great resource for our country. I believe the legislation we are introducing today gives us the opportunity to test a promising idea for strengthening that great resource.

I want to thank my two good friends, Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana and Mr. GOODLING of Pennsylvania, who have joined me in offering this legislation and I am looking forward to working with them toward the passage of the bill.

FURTHER INTO THE ABYSS

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, the downing of an airplane by the Nicaraguan army with three Americans on board is first of all a tragedy for the families of those who died, as well as the family of Eugene Hasenfus. My sincere condolences to those families.

Beyond that, however, I am deeply concerned that this incident is not the exception but the rule as to the conduct of the so-called secret war in Nicaragua. This is just the tip of the iceberg. The more money we send to the contras, the more complicated our involvement will become, and the more complicated that involvement, the more likely it is that U.S. troops may become directly involved. It is, indeed, a slippery slope.

It is in that light that I am inserting a number of articles in the RECORD on this incident. I hope my colleagues will take a moment to read and reflect on the magnitude of this incident.

CAPTURED AMERICAN SAYS CIA RAN SUPPLY MISSIONS—PRISONER SAYS FLIGHTS COORDINATED FROM EL SALVADOR

(By Julia Preston)

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, October 9.—Eugene Hasenfus, an American prisoner of the Sandinista Government, said today he has been part of an extensive air resupply operation for the Nicaraguan rebels run from a Salvadoran Air Force base by CIA employes.

"The people I met in El Salvador, that I knew, were all company people," Hasenfus said, using a term commonly used to refer to the CIA.

"These company people were about 24 to 26 personnel," Hasenfus continued. "They consisted of flight crews, maintenance crews, drivers and two Cuban nationalized Americans that worked for the CIA that did most of the coordination of these flights and overseen [sic] all our housing projects, transportation projects and also refueling and some flight plans."

[Elliott Abrams, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, said in Washington Thursday that there is "no relation at all between the CIA" and Americans aiding in resupply efforts. Abrams suggested Hasenfus' statements were a result of Nicaragua putting "pressure" on him.]

Hasenfus spoke at a press conference this morning called by the Nicaraguan military, and was accompanied by the chief of Army intelligence, Capt. Ricardo Wheelock, and a translator.

He made a slow, sparsely worded, wooden statement that seemed to have been rehearsed beforehand with his captors. Hasenfus did not stumble over his words or appear to be giving unfamiliar information. But the prisoner did not answer questions from reporters.

In response to shouted complaints from the journalists as Hasenfus was led away from the stage, Wheelock asserted that the American prisoner had requested not to be required to answer reporters' questions.

Hasenfus gave the names of two alleged CIA employes who conducted the Salvadoran operation as "Ramon Medina" and "Max Gomez."

Wheelock said Hasenfus has told Sandinista Army officers that "he is a worker for the CIA. He use the word 'worker,' rather than 'employe.' "

Two Americans, William Cooper and Wallace Blaine Sawyer, and an unidentified Latin American were killed when their C123K cargo plane was shot down Sunday in southern Nicaragua. Hasenfus was the only survivor.

Hasenfus said Cooper contacted him in June 1986 about a job as an air freight handler to fly over Central America. He said he was hired by a company called Corporate Air Services, based out of Southern Air Transport, an air cargo firm in Miami reported to have had extensive links to the CIA in the past.

The captive said he flew 10 flights into Nicaragua, in DHC4 Caribous and C123Ks.

Six flights originated at the Ilopango base of the Salvadoran Air Force on the outskirts of San Salvador. The routes of these missions, he said, took them down the western coast of Nicaragua over Pacific waters, then east across the northernmost part of Costa Rica and north into Nicaragua.

Four flights began at Aguacate, a Honduran military air facility in central Honduras, Hasenfus said. He said the missions carried small arms and ammunition. "These were dropped to the contras," Hasenfus added, referring to the Nicaraguan rebels.

Wheelock said Hasenfus had "co-operated" with his interrogators.

Sandinista officials have suggested Hasenfus could face trial here. His public comments could affect the Nicaraguan government's decision to prosecute him.

Most of the information given at the press conference could not be independently verified from Managua in the time available today.

However, contra and Salvadoran sources confirmed the presence of at least one man of Cuban origin living and working at the Ilopango base who they believed to be linked to an American intelligence agency. The man was said to have been coordinating air resupply and other aspects of the contra operation in El Salvador for some time.

Wheelock displayed a pile of logbooks and documents he said were recovered from the plane's shattered wreckage. The documents included two small red flight logbooks with pilot Sawyer's name handwritten in the front. One bore the name and address of Southern Air Transport on the front leaf. They covered flights piloted by Sawyer from April 1985 to September 1986.

Another document was what appeared to be a flight log bearing the marking 824, apparently a registry number for the crashed aircraft.

Sandinista intelligence officers provided a list of 34 American-sounding names cited in Sawyer's logs as crew members on his flights.

Wheelock said Sandinista intelligence had learned from Hasenfus and from documents found in the wreckage that Medina and Gomez, the alleged CIA employees, did not fly on any resupply missions but controlled all operations from their headquarters at the Ilopango base. Reporters were not shown documents backing up Wheelock's allegations on this point.

Hasenfus said he was paid $3,000 a month for his work as a "kicker," pushing cargo out of the planes over Nicaragua. Wheelock quoted Hasenfus as saying the money was deposited directly to his bank account in Marinette, Wis.

The remains of the two American crash victims were turned over to U.S. officials at midafternoon in a raucous melee among journalists at the embassy gate.

A U.S. official said the Nicaraguan government had agreed to drive a truck with the two coffins through the gate. Instead, government employes carried the coffins from almost two blocks away and left them on the street outside, attracting a swarm of press.

Nicaraguan authorities cremated the remains without advising the embassy, a U.S. official said. A statement issued late tonight said the embassy "abhors the ghoulish behavior" of Nicaragua in the incident.

The embassy noted that no U.S. official has been allowed to talk with Hasenfus despite repeated requests. "This raises serious questions about other rights of Mr. Hasenfus that may have been violated," Alberto Fernandez, the embassy spokesman, said.

[Abrams said in Washington, "There is no prediction when we will get access" to Hasenfus. "The question is why, [and] the obvious answer is to maintain pressure on him." Abrams added: "I haven't the slightest doubt they're telling him if he says the right thing he'll be out soon and if not he'll be in jail . . . . This is an outrageous violation of international law and we will continue to insist on our rights."]

U.S. PRISONER IN NICARAGUA SAYS C.I.A. RAN CONTRA SUPPLY FLIGHTS

(By James LeMoyne)

MANAGUA, NICARAGUA, October 9.—An American captured when a plane delivering supplies to rebels was shot down here said today that the supply flights were directly supervised by members of the Central Intelligence Agency in El Salvador.

"Two Cuban naturalized Americans that work for the C.I.A. did most of the coordination for the flights and oversaw all of our housing, transportation, also refueling and some flight plans," the prisoner, Eugene Hasenfus, said at a news conference here with Nicaraguan officials seated beside him.

Mr. Hasenfus then named the two reported C.I.A. officials and gave the most detailed account so far of rebel supply operations out of El Salvador and Honduras. His statements are being treated as a major political victory by the Nicaraguan Government.

PLANE IN "STING" OPERATION

"I was told we were working out of the El Salvador Air Force base at Ilopango," Mr. Hasenfus said. "We would be flying into Honduras to an air base called Aguacate and there we would load up small arms and ammunition and fly into Nicaragua. There it would be dropped to the contra."

The American prisoner looked healthy and Nicaraguan officials said he had been well treated. But reporters could not verify the conditions under which he has been held and questioned, and Mr. Hasenfus's future treatment could depend on the statements he is willing to make here.

[The Drug Enforcement Administration said the plane that was shot down was earlier involved in a United States "sting" operation against the Nicaraguan Government. And Senator Dave Durenberger, the chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, challenged the White House to acknowledge what he said was its role in the plane's flight.

A SENSITIVE MOMENT

The incident comes at a sensitive moment when Congress is about to release $100 million in aid to the rebels. If the C.I.A. was involved in the supply effort, as Mr. Hasenfus says, it would appear to violate Congressional restrictions and directly contradict repeated statements by Reagan Administration officials that the downed plane was part of a purely private effort by American supporters of the Nicaraguan guerrillas.

If, on the other hand, the rebel supply effort was run by a private American organization, as the Administration says, the group appears to have had impressive resources that allowed it to hire former C.I.A. personnel, maintain dozens of Americans in El Salvador, warehouse tons of equipment, buy military transports and fly repeatedly in and out of El Salvador, Honduras and the United States.

Mr. Hasenfus, who is 45 years old, said Nicaraguan rebel supply flights from the main military air base at Ilopango in El Salvador and rebel bases in Honduras were not only supervised by the C.I.A., but were supported also by more than 25 employees of an American company based in El Salvador. These employees appear to have ferried more than 130,000 pounds of military equipment to rebel forces.

PRISONER APPEARS NERVOUS

The American prisoner appeared nervous and spoke slowly, staring straight ahead. Nicaraguan officials said he did not want to answer questions and Mr. Hasenfus left the stage after talking for about 10 minutes. A Nicaraguan intelligence officer said Mr. Hasenfus had spoken because he was demoralized and felt abandoned.

Officials said they still had not decided if he would be put on trial.

Mr. Hasenfus is being detained in the Ministry of the Interior and has been interrogated for two days, according to Nicaraguan officials. They added that it is uncertain when American diplomats or Mr. Hasenfus's wife, Sally, will be allowed to see him. However, the radio here said Mrs. Hasenfus had visited him.

"His situation is very difficult," said Capt. Ricardo Wheelock, head of Nicaraguan military intelligence. "He is a mercenary who has been shot down."

Several documents reportedly taken from the downed rebel plane, including logbooks, registration certificates, Salvadoran Air Force identity cards and personal papers were shown to a reporter for two hours and appeared to support key parts of Mr. Hasenfus's account.

But other aspects, such as his supervision by C.I.A. agents in El Salvador cannot be independently confirmed by a reporter here and are not documented in the papers captured by the Nicaraguans.

The bodies of two American crew members who died when the rebel plane crashed were taken to the American Embassy in coffins this afternoon and left on the street outside the main gate by Sandinista police in what appeared to be a propaganda gesture. The bodies were later taken inside by embassy employees.

Mr. Hasenfus said the Americans all worked for a company called Corporate Air Services in El Salvador, which he said was part of the Southern Air Transport Company in Miami.

Nicaraguan officials charge that both companies work for the C.I.A., Mr. Hasenfus said Corporate Air Services is based at the Salvadoran Air Force base outside the capital of San Salvador.

Captain Wheelock said Mr. Hasenfus had told interrogators that he believed he was working for the C.I.A. when he agreed to join rebel supply flights as a specialist in freight loading. Mr. Hasenfus did not repeat that reported statement at the news conference today.

But he did describe working for eight years for a C.I.A.-operated airline in Southeast Asia, Air America, which he said also once employed the American chief pilot of the downed rebel plane. The pilot died, along with the American co-pilot, when a Sandinista rocket hit the plane over southern Nicaragua on Sunday.

Mr. Hasenfus added that he was approached five months ago by the former Air America pilot, William J. Cooper, with whom he worked flying supplies to C.I.A. agents at remote airstrips in Laos, Cambodia, Thailand and Vietnam from 1965 to 1973. From 1960 to 1965, Mr. Hasenfus said, he was in the Marine Corps.

He said he was paid $3,000 a month plus all expenses for working as a loader on rebel supply flights over Nicaragua. The money was deposited directly into his account at the Pestigo Bank in Marinette, Wis., according to Sandinista officials. It is not clear who paid the money.

The documents found on the rebel C-123 military supply plane included Salvadoran Air Force identity cards that describe the three American crew members, including Mr. Hasenfus, as United States military advisers in El Salvador.

In a statement today, the Salvadoran Army high command denied any involvement in the rebel supply flights. A spokesman at the American Embassy in El Salvador has also denied that any of the American crew members were working as United States military advisers in El Salvador.

One of the crew member's wallet carried the business card of a Robert W. Owen and listed a Washington address and telephone number. Another business card in the wallet was for a Mr. P.J. Buechler, listed as working for the State Department's Nicaraguan Humanitarian Affairs Office. The office was in charge of sending nonlethal aid to Nicaraguan rebels over the last year.

SECRET CONTRA AID: PUBLIC OR PRIVATE?

DOWNED AIRCRAFT RAISES NEW QUESTIONS ABOUT CIA INVOLVEMENT

(George D. Moffett III)

WASHINGTON.—The downing of a transport plane over Nicaragua Monday raises new questions about US support for the anti-Sandinista contra guerrillas.

A government spokesman in Managua said Eugene Hasenfus, the survivor of the downed aircraft, which was filled with arms apparently destined for the US-backed Nicaraguan resistance, identified himself as a US military advisor based in El Salvador.

Secretary of State George Shultz, responding at a news conference yesterday, conceded the plane was chartered by Americans. But he insisted that "they had no connection with the US government at all."

Several private analysts say the crew of the downed aircraft, while probably having no official US connection, may nevertheless have been acting at the direction—or at least with the foreknowledge—of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA).

US officials say the government has remained at arm's length from private groups that have supported the contras during the period when US funding was cut off.

But retired US Army General John Singlaub, who has spearheaded private efforts to channel arms and supplies to the contras, said Sunday on the CBS program "60 Minutes" that CIA director William Casey has "indicated approval, and he has been encouraging."

At least two Americans, members of paramilitary organizations backing the five-year contra war, have been killed inside Nicaragua in recent years.

Last August Congress approved $100 million in mostly military aid to the contras. The legislation provides for US training and arms shipments to the 20,000-man contra force. But those activities are barred until the contra aid package clears a final legislative hurdle, expected before Congress adjourns.

Under existing ground rules that accompanied the passage of $27 million in humanitarian aid to the contras last year, the CIA is denied any direct or indirect operational role in supplying or training contra forces.

A spokesman for the CIA, Sharon Foster, said yesterday there was no CIA connection with the aircraft and said the pilot "is not associated in any way with the agency."

"Congressional restrictions prohibit the agency from supporting the contras and we have not violated the law," Foster said.

But some critics of the Reagan administration's Central America policy say they're not convinced.

"The Reagan administration has a long record of ignoring the Congress on Nicaragua," says Laurence Birns, director of the Council on Hemisphere Affairs. "The leitmotif of US policy has been with or without permission we won't abandon support for the contras."

Critics point out that the US has long been eager to create a viable southern front, based in Costa Rica, to complement the main contra strength now concentrated on the Honduran border. They speculate that the aircraft shot down over Nicaragua may well have been contracted at the behest of US officials, or at least with their knowledge, for the purpose of delivering supplies and trainers to a covert Costa Rican base camp or directly to contra forces operating inside Nicaragua.

"There's no question that the US is involved in strengthening the second front since that's been a long-term strategic desire within the Pentagon," says another Washington-based Nicaragua expert.

Intelligence gathering missions over Nicaragua are legal. But military experts point out that it's unlikely the US would use such old and slow-moving aircraft for such purposes.

Nicaraguan authorities say the C-123 was shot down by Sandinista forces using Soviet-supplied, portable anti-aircraft rockets. They said the plane was crewed by four American military personnel including Hasenfus, the one survivor.

The Nicaraguans have so far produced no evidence of their claims, noting that bad weather has so far prevented military officers from escorting newsmen to the crash site.

Spokesmen for the Sandinista government say the aircraft was loaded with 50,000 rounds of ammunition plus Soviet-made assault rifles and grenades. One source familiar with CIA operations says it is a common practice for the agency to supply Soviet-made weapons purchased on the international arms market to allow plausible deniability in just such cases.

Congressional sources say even if Nicaragua was to prove Hasenfus was a US military advisor, it's unlikely that Congress would reverse itself on contra aid in an election year.

"It's not likely that anything, including this, will throw contra aid off track now," says one congressional aide.

But if administration denials are proved false, Congress could eventually act to tighten the restrictions that accompany new US aid to the contra forces. US military personnel would be barred from operating within 20 miles of the Nicaraguan border, though non-American advisors working under contract could accompany the contras inside Nicaragua.

FLIERS' NETWORK SHARES OLD CIA LINKS

(By Joanne Omang and Joe Pichirallo)

The cargo plane shot down Sunday in Nicaragua with three Americans and a load of weapons aboard was part of a shadowy worldwide network of private contract airlines and independent pilots who share past links to the Central Intelligence Agency and continuing taste for adventure.

People now or previously involved in the network suggested in interviews yesterday that an informal brotherhood of Vietnam war veterans of covert action operations has been reactivated in Central America to transport goods to Nicaraguan rebels, known as contras, who are trying to overthrow the leftist Sandinista government. They agreed that the CIA, while it may not be directly involved, keeps an eye on the proceedings.

"There is a large group of unemployed or underemployed pilots who have airplanes, who are vying with one another, bidding for the flying jobs that exist in Central America," retired major general John K. Singlaub said at a news conference. "Some of them haul fresh vegetables from Guatemala to the United States. The same airplane that last week was hauling cantaloupes . . . next week may be hauling bullets."

Singlaub, who has boasted in the past of buying arms in other countries for the contras, vehemently denied published reports that he had been behind the fight of a Fairchild C123K cargo plane in which pilot William J. Cooper of Reno, Nev., copilot Wallace B. Sawyer Jr., of Magnolia, Ark., and an unidentified Latin American were killed.

Singlaub said he believed CIA denials of links to the flight, although the flight's sole, survivor, Eugene Hasenfus, of Marinette, Wis., told reporters in Nicaragua yesterday that he was "a worker" for the CIA.

"In the past people have sincerely believed they were working for the CIA when they were not," Singlaub said. "If you're working for the CIA there would be an air rescue effort standing by" as the plane enters enemy territory, Singlaub continued. "There would be all sorts of electronic surveillance" to warn of possible attack. "Obviously this one had none of that," he said.

Elliott Abrams, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, said in an interview that it is "predictable and logical" that "there is a small circle of people who fly into hostile territory carrying military supplies." They "are ex-Vietnam, ex-CIA, ex-Air America," the CIA's Vietnam-era cover airline, and have worked in Africa and elsewhere.

There is "no relation at all between the CIA and these people," Abrams said. However, "the CIA is asked to report on events in Central America, and among things they report on to us is some of this activity . . . but they do not direct it, directly or indirectly, wink or nod, or steer people. It's illegal," Abrams said.

Under a 1984 law that barred CIA aid to the contras, the agency may still do "intelligence sharing" with them but may not train, arm, equip, advise or otherwise direct any contra activity. That restriction will be lifted under the $100 million U.S. contra aid package awaiting final approval in Congress.

State Department officials said yesterday that the restriction may be technically lifted already under the terms of the temporary omnibus spending bill in effect through today. "We view it as not lifted and are acting as though it is not; some people would get angry if we did otherwise," Abrams said.

Nevertheless, the House Judiciary subcommittee on criminal justice said yesterday that it will investigate possible violations of law in the plane crash incident, joining probes already under way by the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence and Foreign Relations Committee.

Senate Majority Leader Robert J. Dole (R-Kan.) complained that the facts of the case "just don't, shouldn't anyway, add up to banner headlines or lead stories." Hasenfus, "being paraded from pillar to post by some Sandinista goons just so the press can get a good camera angle, becomes the symbol of all kinds of imagined evil," Dole said. "If you stick to the facts, it isn't much of a story."

A report in the Long Island newspaper Newsday cited defense sources as saying funds for the flight, an estimated $250,000, were provided by Saudi Arabian officials, but Saudi spokesmen denied any government links. The report cited Senate intelligence committee staff sources as saying that the officials may have acted on their own, possibly through retired Air Force major general Richard Secord, a former adviser to Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger on Mideast arms.

Secord, was unavailable for comment, but other sources close to the Saudis said his links with them virtually ended in 1983 when he left the Defense Department.

William M. Leary, a history professor at the University of Georgia and author of a history of CIA covert operations in Southeast Asia, said the dead pilot Cooper, like Hasenfus, once worked for Air America.

Leary said he met Cooper in Reno, Nev., while doing research for a new book on Air America. Cooper had been a Navy pilot in the Pacific during World War II and showed Leary a commendation letter from the late Adm. William F. Halsey, Leary said.

Cooper flew jets for the Navy in the Korean war and later was the chief pilot for Air America's C123 cargo planes, flying rice and guns from the Udorn air base to CIA-backed hill tribes in Laos.

"Sure, he was in it for the money and the adventure, but he was also a patriot," Leary said. "The Sandinistas couldn't have given him enough money to get him to work for them." Nearly 60, Cooper "was looking for a job" when Leary last saw him a year ago. "I guess he found it." Leary said.

"The network wouldn't really be possible unless the American government took a benevolent attitude toward the whole thing," he said. "There's no U.S. money or personnel, but . . . you don't get across to Salvadoran military bases on your own."

Intelligence officials told members of Congress Wednesday that the downed plane had flown to Nicaragua out of Ilopango air base in El Salvador, a tightly guarded military facility. Knowledgeable sources who recently traveled to El Salvador said yesterday that a four-member American flight crew apparently lives in a barracks at Ilopango, maintaining contra airplanes parked there and contract airline planes that come in periodically, an account that tallies with Hasenfus' remarks.

Leary said Southern Air Transport Inc., which employed copilot Sawyer until last year, had a Latin American division and an Asian division when it was owned by the CIA between 1960 and 1973. When the CIA sold all its proprietary lines in 1973, "it retained friendly relations" with the airline, he said.

Southern Air was purchased to provide support to two other CIA-owned airlines operating in the Far East—Air America and Air Asia—according to Lawrence R. Houston, general counsel to the CIA who retired in 1973.

"This was sort of a family of companies working closely together," Houston recalled in a telephone interview yesterday. He said Southern Air helped with legitimate commercial work, although some of its crew members "from time to time might have been assigned to Air America."

When Southern Air was a CIA front, Houston said, two of its stockholders and directors were Percival Flack Brundage and E. Perkins McGuire, respectively director of the old Bureau of the Budget and an assistant secretary of defense during the Eisenhower administration. Both are now dead.

The third director and stockholder was Stanley G. Williams, and when the CIA sold the company, Williams bought it, Houston said. But Williams is no longer listed in Florida state corporate records, and a secretary yesterday said he is no longer with the company.

The company's current chairman is James H. Bastian, a former Washington, D.C., lawyer, the records show. Bastian did legal work for Southern Air when it was owned by the CIA and also was a lawyer for Air America, according to Houston and published reports.

Efforts to reach Bastian and other Southern Air officials have been unsuccessful.

According to a 1976 report by the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, the CIA decided to sell Southern Air because "the political realities and future operational requirements in the postwar era of Southeast Asia . . . did not call for such a transport operation."

Houston said that, after the firm was sold, "so far as I know we [the CIA] had no further dealings with it."

Houston said he doubted that the plane downed in Nicaragua was linked to the CIA because it would be "rather ridiculous" to use a firm already publicly linked to the agency.

In a Wednesday statement, Southern Air spokesman William Kress said the company did not own or operate the downed aircraft. He said in published interviews that Southern Air did maintenance work on the plane, but would not say who contracted for the work.

Records of the Dade County Aviation Department show that a C123 with registration identical to the downed craft was parked for servicing at Southern Air from July 29 through Aug. 4.

LET'S PROTECT SSDI RECIPIENTS

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, along with more than 20 of my House colleagues, I introduced a concurrent resolution to express the sense of Congress regarding continued adherence to the vital reforms mandated by the Social Security Disability Benefits Reform Act of 1984—an identical resolution was filed in the other body by Senator KERRY. We introduced this resolution because of our concern that the important reforms contained in that law, and the positive steps that have been made in improving the SSDI System since its enactment, are being threatened by recent Social Security Administration proposals calling for increased SSDI workloads and speeded up processing of both continuing disability reviews and new applications. We think it is essential that Congress send a message now, before any decisions about increased workloads become final, that we will not tolerate any administration actions which frustrate the intent of the 1984 law or return the SSDI program to the chaos which existed before the bill was passed.

Those of us who were serving in this body in the 97th and 98th Congress will no doubt recall the flood of phone calls and letters which came into our offices during that period from disabled people who had been unjustly removed from the SSDI rolls. In fact, it was largely because of the extraordinary public outcry from around the country that Congress became aware of the overly zealous manner in which the Reagan administration was conducting the continuing reviews of SSDI recipients' eligibility, and ultimately approved the 1984 reform legislation.

That legislation—which became law under the strong leadership of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE], who at that time chaired the Subcommittee on Social Security—required a series of reforms which were designed to ensure that all SSDI recipients and applicants would receive the fair treatment to which they are entitled. But, above all, the legislation made it clear that Congress would no longer tolerate the kind of wholesale removal from the SSDI rolls which had occurred between 1981 and 1983.

I think it is an especially apt tribute to the care and thoroughness with which Congressman PICKLE drafted the bill to note that it was approved in the House with only one dissenting vote, and in the Senate unanimously. Though we all knew that enactment of this legislation was only a first step, I think we were also confident that the reforms it contained would put the SSDI Program back on the right track. And, we have seen significant improvements in the management of the program over the last 2 years. I know that the complaints my office has received have dwindled to almost nothing, and the same thing has been true for most other Members of Congress. In addition, the allowance rates for new applicants have been increasing, and the number of cases being appealed to the administrative law judge level have been declining.

But, a recent directive from SSA requiring the adoption of certain "simplification initiatives" may make it more difficult for applicants to present their cases and to understand why they have been denied eligibility. These proposals, when coupled with the freeze on the hiring of new examiners and the plan to resume continuing disability reviews, could spell the end of the improving trend we have witnessed in the SSDI Program. In fact, according to SSA's own statistics, the workloads for some States could increase by as much as 50 percent.

Mr. Speaker, there is no reason now, just when the program is getting back to normal, to undertake a drastic, new expansion of the program. Let's give the 1984 reforms time to work, and proceed at a more reasonable pace. Passage of this resolution will send that message to the administration and the thousands of people around the country who depend on SSDI benefits. I am pleased that Congressman PICKLE has signed on as one of the original cosponsors of this resolution, and I urge my colleagues to join us as cosponsors.

I am submitting for the RECORD a copy of the resolution and a recent Washington Post article on this issue:

H. CON. RES. —

Concurrent resolution to express the sense of Congress regarding efficient and compassionate management of the Social Security Disability Insurance SSDI Program

Whereas Congress established the Social Security Disability Insurance [SSDI] program in 1956 to improve the quality of life for disabled Americans;

Whereas the decisions of the Social Security Administration to require an increased caseload for SDI examiners and expand the continuing disability review process caused several hundred thousand recipients to be removed improperly from the SSDI rolls during the period of 1981 through 1983;

Whereas the widespread termination and denial of benefits for eligible disabled Americans during such period created undue hardship for countless deserving individuals;

Whereas more than 60 percent of the recipients who appealed a decision to terminate or deny benefits were ultimately successful in reversing the decision;

Whereas the substantial increase in the number of appealed cases drained millions of dollars from the Social Security Trust Fund;

Whereas Congress passed (with only one dissenting vote) the Social Security Disability Benefits Reform Act of 1984 in order to end the inconsistent and frequently arbitrary manner in which the Social Security Administration was applying disability standards, as well as to restore public faith and confidence in the SSDI Program;

Whereas since enactment of such Act, there has been, as intended by Congress, a marked improvement in the SSDI review process and the beginning of a restoration of public confidence in the program; and

Whereas recent budget proposals by the Social Security Administration for the fiscal year 1987 indicate that there will be an increase in the SSDI workload for many States, thus threatening a return to the chaos that existed prior to the 1984 act: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring) That it is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the Social Security administration should not—

(A) reduce the staff of State Disability Determination Services or increase the workload of SSDI examiners to levels that would prevent adequate case development in accordance with the standards estabilised in the Social Security Disability Benefits Reform Act of 1984, or

(B) initiate any other action that would impair the ability of examiners to determine eligibility for benefits in accordance with the requirements of such Act; and

(2) the Social Security Administration should place higher priority on assisting States in both complying with the 1984 reforms and improving the accuracy with which SSDI eligibility is determined.

STATES ASKED TO INCREASE DISABILITY CASELOADS

HILL CRITICS FEAR MOVE WILL THREATEN CHANGES

(By Spencer Rich)

The Social Security Administration has asked state agencies that handle federal Social Security disability claims to boost employe workloads by about 20 percent in fiscal 1987, bringing protests from some officials that the effort will undermine procedural changes approved by Congress two years ago.

Social Security Commissioner Dorcas Hardy, in a statement issued through her office, said the increased caseloads "are not a national speedup" but just an attempt to improve efficiency. She said the goals were set after consultation with several states and are fair and reasonable.

But David MacCabe, deputy director of the Texas disability determination office, said, "They are asking us to speed up determinations without enough resources. . . . We haven't really implemented what Congress wanted us to do."

In 1984, Congress made it harder for the government to remove people from the disability rolls, after a speedup in reviews that started in 1981 forced 495,000 off the lists and prompted charges of unfairness and shoddy procedures. About 214,000 were restored on appeal.

The Social Security Administration pays state agencies to make initial eligibility rulings when people apply for Social Security and Supplemental Security Income disability benefits, and also to review people already on the rolls to see if they are still too disabled to work.

Federal payments to the agencies in 1987 will be about $741 million, about the same as this year's; Social Security disability benefits in 1985 totaled nearly $19 billion.

According to the Social Security Administration, in the first 11 months of fiscal 1986 the average annual caseload rate per employee in the state agencies was 165. SSA has set a goal of 195 as the national average for fiscal 1987, an 18 percent increase. While nearly all states will be required to increase their caseloads, those far below 195 will not be required to reach it in one jump.

Kasper M. Goshgarian, deputy commissioner of disability determination services in Massachusetts, said he feared that if enough pressure is exerted for bigger caseloads, the problems of 1981–82 would recur.

A letter drafted by Rep. Barney Frank (D-Mass.) and signed by his state's House members and senators warned Hardy that "a drastic speedup in case processing at this point" could severely damage the program and "threaten a return to the situation we faced in 1981."

Goshgarian said that "if you overwhelm" employes with cases, they will not be getting enough evidence on applicants' medical conditions and "not aggressively making all the telephone calls to get information" needed to rule fairly.

Social Security spokesman Jim Brown said that under Hardy's goals nearly all states will be asked to increase their caseloads per employe in 1987, including many that already are at or higher than 195. He said 22 states already exceed that figure.

Hardy, responding to Goshgarian, said Massachusetts ranks 46th in productivity, with an average annual caseload per employe of 121 for the first nine months of fiscal 1986. This had risen to about 138 in the third quarter of the year. Brown said Massachusetts is expected to reach at least 158 in fiscal 1987.

In mid-1986, the District of Columbia's average annual rate of cases handled per employe was 109, according to Brown; the 1987 requirement is 128. In Maryland, the mid-1986 rate was 128; next year's is 171, he said. Virginia is expected to raise its rate from 178 to 188.

HOMECARE QUALITY ASSURANCE ACT OF 1986

HON. EDWARD R. ROYBAL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today, as Chairman of the House Select Committee on Aging, to introduce the "Homecare Quality Assurance Act of 1986" [HCQA]. HCQA is an important first step for Congress in ensuring the quality of care received by all persons in their homes whether it is provided under Medicare, Medicaid, the Social Security block grant, or the Older Americans Act.

The need for this legislation became apparent in the findings of the American Bar Association's [ABA] study of home care quality, "The Black Box of Home Care Quality," which was released at the committee's July 29th home care hearing. The ABA report outlines the disturbing lack of knowledge about the quality of care provided in the home setting, the alarming potential for quality problems, and the inadequacy of our current quality assurance system when it comes to home care. The findings of their report make it clear that we need to develop standards and monitoring mechanisms which will ensure that home care services are reliable and of the highest quality possible.

"The Homecare Quality Assurance Act," for which I am asking your support, addresses the deficiencies the ABA report cites in our current quality assurance system. The act covers all home care services provided under Medicare, Medicaid, the Social Security block grant, and the Older Americans Act and includes the following provisions: establishes a home care consumer bill of rights; sets home care quality standards; creates quality assurance monitoring mechanisms through PRO's and the states; expands the State Ombudsman Program to include home care services; calls for a strong consumer role in monitoring activities; requires that agencies have plan of care and care coordination policies; requires that sanctions and penalties be available to ensure compliance; provides for training and certification of all home care providers; and calls for research and demonstration projects and the collection of data on the use and quality of home care services.

While home care services generally enjoy a good reputation, we are deeply concerned by the potential for quality problems in light of the rapid growth in home care services in recent years, the increased financial pressures on home care providers under cost containment, the absence of adequate Federal and State quality assurance systems for home care, the lack of training for home care personnel, and, most importantly, the vulnerability of the elderly and disabled home care consumer.

Clearly, home care plays a vital role in permitting older persons to continue living independently or with families in the community. Yet, providing care in the home carries the risk of poor care, unreliable services, and outright neglect, abuse and exploitation. It is therefore imperative that we have in place a means of ensuring the quality of home care services if we are to be successful in providing elderly and disabled persons with the opportunity for a meaningful, healthful and independent life.

In this spirit, I urge you to join me in demonstrating that congressional concern for quality care does not stop at the hospital or nursing home door—but extends into what is potentially the most vulnerable care environment of all, the home.

Mr. Speaker, I include the summary of the "Homecare Quality Assurance Act of 1986" in the RECORD:

THE HOME CARE QUALITY ASSURANCE ACT OF 1986 (HCQA), H.R. 5680

A Bill to Establish a Quality Assurance System For Home Care Services

PURPOSE

H.R. 5680, "The Homecare Quality Assurance Act of 1986" (HCQA), is designed to promote the health, safety and well-being of individuals receiving health and social services in their homes under Medicare, Medicaid, the Social Services Block Grant and the Older Americans Act by establishing: a federal bill of rights for home care consumers; home care quality assurance standards; monitoring and sanctioning mechanisms for home care; quality assurance research and demonstration projects; and data gathering requirements.

THE BILL

H.R. 5680, "The Homecare Quality Assurance Act of 1986" (HCQA), is a first step toward ensuring the quality of care provided to persons in their home under Medicare, Medicaid, the Social Services Block Grant, and the Older Americans Act. HCQA is based largely on the findings of the American Bar Association's report, "The Black Box of Home Care Quality" which reports serious deficiencies in our current quality assurance system when it comes to home care. Bill Provisions include the following.

Establishes a federal bill of rights for home care consumers under Medicare, Medicaid, the Social Services Block Grant and the Older Americans Act.

Sets home care quality assurance standards and requires compliance as a condition of participation under Medicare, Medicaid, the Social Security Block Grant, and the Older Americans Act.

Requires that home care agencies have plan of care policies which identify services to be provided, provide a means for identifying additional client needs and include coordination mechanisms with other service agencies.

Requires that home care agencies have appropriate administrative policies including governance structures, fiscal and personnel management, and client records.

Requires that PROs provide quality assurance monitoring of all health agencies funded under Medicare or Medicaid, expending at least as many resources on quality assurance as on cost containment.

Requires that states have a quality assurance monitoring mechanism for home help services funded under Medicaid, the Social Services Block Grant Program and the Older Americans Act.

Requires that states establish a Consumer Advisory Board (CAB) which conducts oversight activities, provides input into the award and evaluation of the PRO and home help monitoring mechanisms and receives input from home care beneficiaries.

Requires that PROs, state home care monitoring mechanisms and Ombudsman Programs have toll-free hot-lines to receive questions and complaints from beneficiaries, providers and others concerning home care quality issues.

Requires that sanctions, including civil penalties, be available to ensure compliance with quality assurance standards.

Requires that DHHS establish training requirements for all individual delivering home care services and fund training programs for personnel and caregivers, and requires that states develop certification requirements for homemakers, home health aides and personal care attendants.

Requires that DHHS establish guidelines and provide funding for home care quality assurance studies and demonstration projects.

Amends the Older Americans Act to include a Nursing Home Facilities and Home Care Ombudsman Program to investigate and resolve nursing home and home care service complaints and to provide information on nursing home and home care services.

BACKGROUND

Growing Need: With the rapid increase in the number of older persons and the availability of funding (albeit limited) to support services, home care has mushroomed over the past two decades, but with virtually no provisions to ensure the quality of care delivered. While four percent of the population of the United States was 65 or over in 1900, that age group is now 12 percent. In 1900, some three million persons were sixty-five and older compared to twenty-eight million in 1984. That number of older persons is expected to increase even more dramatically over the next several decades, reaching over sixty-four million by the year 2030. More importantly, the greatest percentage of growth is in the number of persons in the 85 and older category. While the rest of the population increased by 9.1 percent over the past ten years, the 85+ population grew by 56.6 percent. It is this group of individuals who have the greatest need for home care and other long term care services, as they are at the greatest risk of chronic illnesses and limitations in functional abilities. An estimated 31.6 percent of those 85 years and over need assistance with personal care.

Rapid Growth in Services: Concurrently, there has been a rapid growth and expansion in the home care market. Between 1966 and 1986, the number of certified home health agencies grew from 1,275 to 6,005. Since 1982, certified home health agencies have increased by 55 percent. Although home health care consumes only three percent of the Medicare budget, it is the fastest growing segment of that budget. From 1974–83, Medicare expenditures for home health increased at an annual rate of 25 percent. Investor-owned agencies increased by 300 percent between 1982 and 1984. Proprietary home health care agencies now make up more than 30 percent of Medicare certified agencies, up from six percent in 1979. In addition, there are many home care agencies providing only support services or a mix of support and health services. While no accurate figure exists documenting the number of agencies or programs which provide these services, the American Bar Association estimates that they may number 10,000.

Inadequacy of Current Quality Assurance System: Despite this dramatic growth in home care, little is known about the quality of care provided. As such, home care quality remains a "black box"—a virtual unknown. There is a lack of data about who is providing these services, how many people are being served and how many public and private dollars are going into home care. Most importantly, little objective data are available on the quality of home care. The data that do exist are primarily anecdotal and range from statements of "excellent services" to "horror stories." Of particular concern is the in-home location of services that makes the actual delivery of care virtually invisible and, therefore, largely beyond the easy reach of public or professional scrutiny.

Quality standards for home care are, at best, inadequate. Further, what monitoring occurs at the federal level focuses largely on reimbursement fraud and abuse. Although Medicare conditions of participation provide standards for the delivery of home health care, these standards have been criticized as only providing "paper" compliance. Further, federal quality assurance standards and monitoring systems for home help services, i.e., home care services other than home health services, are virtually nonexistent. The quality assurance standards and monitoring systems that are available for home help services are provided by the states or local units of government. The American Bar Association reports that thirty-four states and the District of Columbia have some regulation of home care. In the majority of these cases, regulations mimic the Medicare conditions of participation and focus on home health care rather than the broad array of home care services.

IN BRIEF—WHY H.R. 5680

Vulnerable consumers

Certified home health agencies grew from 1,275 in 1966 to 6,005 in 1986. Between 1982 and 1984 alone, they increased by more than 50%.

The total number of home care agencies, including both Medicare and non-Medicare, is estimated to be as high as 10,000—over a 50% increase from 1982.

Investor-owned agencies increased by 300% between 1982 and 1984. Propietary home health care agencies are more than 30% of Medicare certified agencies, up from 6% in 1979. Investor-owned hospital and nursing home chains operated 145 home health facilities in 1985, up by 96% from 1984.

The major growth areas in home care have been in high technology services and paraprofessional services such as homemakers. These are the areas in which there has been the least oversight and regulation for quality assurance.

Home health care is the fastest growing portion of Medicare. Between 1974 and 1983, Medicare reimbursement of home health providers grew 25% annually.

1980 Title XX expenditures for community based care were over $2 billion. Older Americans Act expenditures were over $724 million.

In 1982, the disabled elderly spent $2 billion out of pocket for home based care and durable medical equipment and supplies.

Inadequate quality assurance system

The location of home care services makes their actual delivery essentially invisible and beyond the easy reach of public or professional scrutiny.

Medicare Conditions of Participation stop at "paper" compliance. Standards do not stipulate the amount of training required by home health aides nor are clients routinely interviewed to determine the quality of care provided.

There are few sanctions for inadequate or poor quality home health care outside of decertification for Medicare certified home health agencies. Federal quality assurance systems for home help services are virtually non-existent.

DHHS reports that, since 1981, only 23 providers have been "involuntarily terminated" from the Medicare program for failure to comply with required standards. Yet, 40% of 60 certified providers in one state with an active quality monitoring system were deficient in "coordination of patient services and 70% were deficient on "conformance with physicians orders."

Quality of homemaker/personal care and home health aide services were reported to be a major problem by a majority of the case managers interviewed in the National Long Term Care Channeling Demonstrations.

Sixty-five percent of over 1,000 home care professionals recently surveyed indicated that quality of care in community based services was a key issue of concern.

While 34 states and DC have home care regulations, most simply cite the Medicare home health regulations and do not regulate the non-health component of home care. Virtually none provides for consumer rights or grievance procedures.

PRESIDENTS CONTROL FOREIGN POLICY

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of this body a timely editorial which appeared this morning in a hometown newspaper, the Schenectady Gazette.

This editorial clearly expresses a truth that is imbedded deeply in our Constitution—that our foreign policy is in the hands of the President, and not in the hands of 535 little Secretaries of State at this end of Pennsylvania Avenue.

Mr. Speaker, incalculable harm has been done to our foreign policy by congressional interference since the Vietnam war. And now that the President is about to meet with Secretary Gorbachev in Iceland, we would do well to heed the advice of this editorial.

"And Congress," it states, "should not try to impose a nuclear test ban against presidential wishes."

It concludes by saying that "Congress should exert its authority over spending and leave negotiations to the executive."

With that reminder, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure other Members of this body join me in wishing President Reagan success in these important preliminary talks.

ARMS CONTROL AND THE BUDGET

President Reagan departed for the nonsummit summit in Iceland with a final blast at a congressional effort to guide arms control. House leaders responded by nothing that the president had rejected conciliatory offers and indicating they would hang tough. Much of the bluster on both sides is empty rhetoric, but the House does have some important weapons limits in its proposed spending bill and should leave them there.

The president went on the radio last Saturday to ask Congress not to hinder his summit talks by imposing arms control provisions that would make the Soviets less inclined to negotiate. But the president is not going to Iceland to negotiate an arms treaty. Even he says that the purpose of the meeting is to prepare for another meeting. Congress should be not a bit concerned about how the proposed bill would affect the Iceland tete-a-tete.

Lawmakers should be concerned, though, about what happens at the arms reduction talks in Geneva, and—especially in a budget measure—on the economic effect of the arms race in this country.

The president is right to insist that he, and not Congress, should control arms talks. But he is wrong to twist that into an argument for a blank check from Congress. The president should propose weapons development plans in accordance with defense needs and possible negotiations. But he must sell Congress on the need for them because lawmakers determine spending levels.

Some of the arms control provisions included in the House "continuing resolution," which authorizes 1987 spending, are inappropriate. Specifically, Congress should not tell the president to abide by the unratified SALT II treaty. Compliance with this agreement is voluntary and a matter of negotiation with the Soviets. The White House has the right to decide this issue.

And Congress should not try to impose a nuclear test ban against presidential wishes. A test ban would be a highly desirable element of a weapons treaty, but the administration must negotiate it.

On the other hand, the House is within its rights to freeze funding for the so-called Star Wars missile defense system, and block production of a new generation of chemical weapons. Congress controls the purse strings on such programs and can properly set conditions on spending. A final proposal to bar testing of antisatellite weapons is therefore also justified because it defines what type of antisatellite program Congress is funding—a research program. Testing would bring the project into a development phase, and by barring testing Congress is blocking development.

The squabble between Reagan and Congress involves important principles that are only obscured by talk of tied hands, summit meetings and continuing resolutions. Both sides should abandon the rhetoric, Congress should exert its authority over spending and leave negotiations to the executive.

WHAT PRICE SANCTUARY

HON. DAVID DREIER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, during our debate on comprehensive immigration reform, we have all heard many facts and figures depicting the critical nature of the crisis. For the record I would like to submit the following assessment of the effects of illegal immigration on Los Angeles. Despite its brevity, its author, Los Angeles County Supervisor Peter F. Schabarum, presents a comprehensive picture of the economic and social strain millions of undocumented aliens are putting on the Los Angeles community. I recommend this report to any of my colleagues who are in doubt as to the need to regain control over our borders:

WHAT PRICE SANCTUARY?

(By Peter F. Schabaram)

Politicians and citizens of all backgrounds are divided, sometimes bitterly, over the issues of illegal immigration and political refugees. But America is a nation of immigrants and there is deep compassion for those who come here in search of a better life. Emma Lazarus captured that spirit with her inscription on the State of Liberty:

"Give me your tired, your poor,
Your huddled masses, yearning to breathe free . . ."

My own grandparents were examples of the American immigrant dream. My grandfather, a German engineer, migrated to Mexico where he met and married my Mexican grandmother. They eventually immigrated legally to California with their children and became U.S. citizens. There were no welfare programs then and they and all the other immigrants worked hard to pay for food, clothing and shelter.

Today, those programs and more are available to immigrants, both legal and illegal, and Los Angeles County is staggering under the burden of caring for all those who come to our shores.

By the chance of geography, according to the U.S. Census in 1980, 49.8 percent of all undocumented aliens in the U.S. were in California, 64.3 percent of those settled in Los Angeles County.

Let me share with you some more eye-opening statistics:

Los Angeles County is home to an estimated 1 million undocumented aliens,

Los Angeles County has more undocumented aliens than all other states combined, with the exception of New York, Texas and the entire state of California,

It costs local taxpayers more than $200 million each year to provide health, justice and social services for this population;

The County Department of Health Services will spend $115 million this year on health care for the more than 600 illegal aliens who daily occupy beds in the five County hospitals—none of which is reimbursed by the State or Federal government;

Approximately 70 percent (or 18,000) of the babies born in County hospitals are to undocumented alien women. These babies are automatically American citizens and are eligible for the welfare rolls and all other benefits available to U.S. citizens;

48,000 children per month whose mothers are undocumented aliens receive benefits costing county taxpayers a monthly $8 million;

If congress passes one of the several immigration reform bils before it, the county will be saddled with a staggering $300 million cost per year to provide health and welfare for these newly legalized residents; and 62,500 political refugees are already on the county's welfare rolls as the result of previous congressional decisions.

The Board of Supervisors has no quarrel with the humanitarian aspect of providing public services to refugees and illegal immigrants. There are strong moral and public health reasons which dictate that public services be made available to these people. We are concerned, however, with the question of who has ultimate responsibility for paying for those services. We believe that obligation belongs to the federal government. After all, they have sole responsibility for controlling immigration into the United States and that responsibility includes providing for an orderly process of entry to the United States. As it is, our treasured "melting pot" is in danger of overflowing and putting out the flame.

Despite the above facts and contrary to federal law, the Mayor and a City Council majority, have by proclaiming Los Angeles a sanctuary, touched off a storm of protest. And, the public has a right to be angry.

Who will take care of these people? Not the Mayor or the Los Angeles City Council.

The burden will fall squarely on the taxpayers of Los Angeles County. I think this is morally and financially unacceptable.

IMMIGRATION REFORM

HON. GERALD D. KLECZKA

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, I believe that immigration reform is desperately needed, and I support many of the bill's provisions. Specifically, I support employer sanctions and legalization for undocumented workers who have established roots in this country.

However, I voted against the rule and the bill because it contained the Schumer legalization plan. I do not believe that the House should have considered this legislation under a rule which prohibited, the bill's most controversial component, the Schumer proposal, from being voted on or amendment.

Certainly, the modified Schumer plan for farmworkers is less onerous than his earlier proposal. However, it still allows illegal immigrants who have briefly worked in agriculture to gain temporary resident status and subsequently to become citizens. It also permits additional farmworkers to enter this country as residents and later to beome citizens. This legalization plan goes too far and would not serve the interests of the country as a whole.

The cost of the Schumer proposal is more than we can bear during this time of budget crisis; if 250,000 workers were granted resident status, the public assistance costs associated with legalizing these workers is estimated to be $900 million by 1991.

In addition, unemployment in the United States remains very high, and there is little doubt that the large numbers of newly admitted workers would compete for jobs with workers already in this country.

I think that this legislation will help to reduce the flow of undocumented workers in this country. However, I fear that the U.S. taxpayer and the average worker may have to bear an unfairly heavy burden to accomplish this goal.

A TRIBUTE TO HULDA CROOKS

HON. JERRY LEWIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure and admiration that I bring to your attention a most remarkable lady, Mrs. Hulda Crooks of Loma Linda, CA. Two months ago today, I joined Mrs. Crooks as she attempted her 23d ascent of Mount Whitney, the highest mountain in the continental United States at 14,494 feet. This achievement alone stands as a remarkable testimony to her dedication and determination. Most remarkable, however, is that Mrs. Crooks still climbs mountains at the young age of 90.

Mrs. Crooks was born on a farm in Saskatchewan, Canada, on May 19, 1896. Married to Dr. Samuel Crooks of Loma Linda, Mrs. Crooks pursued hiking and later mountain climbing with encouragement from her husband prior to his death in 1950. Since that time, Mrs. Crooks has scaled 97 different mountain peaks, each one represented by a colorful patch on her well-traveled backpack.

As a result of less healthier days some years ago, Mrs. Crooks is today an ardent promoter of healthful living. She began her physical regimen by walking and later pursued more vigorous exercise by jogging. An active member of the Loma Linda Lopers, a 400-member health and fitness group, she presently holds eight world records for women over the age of 80. In addition, she recently wrote a book, "Trails, Trials and Triumphs," proclaiming that life really begins after 60. Speaking on health and physical fitness up to a dozen times each month and having devoted many years to hospital work in dietetics and research, Mrs. Crooks still works as a medical literature researcher and walks up to 100 miles each month to stay in shape.

In 1962, at the age of 66, Mrs. Crooks made her first ascent of Mount Whitney. She has been going back to her mountain each year, making the difficult climb 22 times and being turned back only three times because of bad weather. Her greatest desire is helping others, especially young people, realize the value of good health and how to achieve it. "If I can influence young people," she says, "I feel I have done something worthwhile." She demonstrates to people of all ages that one is never too old to pursue a healthier lifestyle. "Older people tend to feel their lives are over when they reach 65," she says. "They think they are all done. But there is a lot of good living after 65 if you have an interest in life."

Above all else, Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Crooks exudes hope and enthusiasm. "You must always have hope for the future," she reminded her friends on the trail with her recently. And, most importantly, Mrs. Crooks is a woman of deep devotion who fervently believes our lives should be a reflection of God's will and that we live by God's grace. Clearly, the example and inspiration she provides for men and women, both young and old, is simply remarkable. Please join me today in recognizing this most outstanding and deserving lady, adoringly known by her many friends as "Grandma Whitney."

IRINA RATUSHINSKAYA IS RELEASED FROM PRISON IN KIEV

HON. PATRICIA SCHROEDER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform my colleagues that Irina Ratushinskaya, Soviet poet and human rights activist, was released last night from the K.B.G. prison in Kiev.

In 1983, Ms. Ratushinskaya was arrested and sentenced to 7 years hard labor for her activities in the human rights movement. She became active in the movement after she and her husband were refused permission to emigrate several times. Last summer, Ms. Ratushinskaya was moved from a labor camp in Mordavia to the K.B.G. prison in Kiev.

Ms. Ratushinskaya was released unconditionally Thursday night. She plans to apply to go to Great Britain for medical treatment. While she was in prison, reports indicated her health was bad and she was suffering from a number of ailments without receiving adequate medical treatment.

When we speak of the spirit of Iceland, this is what we mean. I applaud the Soviets for this initial humanitarian gesture and hope that they will release other human rights cases that we have all been following for years.

CLARIFICATION OF H.R. 5445: CIVIL RICO REFORM

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSLYVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, since the battle to reform civil RICO began almost 1½ years ago, I have strongly supported those who sought a effective change in the law that would eliminate the widespread misuse of the statute.

As ranking minority member of the Criminal Justice Subcommittee, which ultimately reported H.R. 5445, I joined with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOUCHER] in pressing for the adoption of a prior-criminal-conviction requirement. Despite the overwhelming support that the prior-criminal-conviction requirement had garnered in the subcommittee, the Judiciary Committee, and the House itself, we agreed to compromise in order to see to it that Congress provided substantial relief to the victims of civil RICO this year. I note that the Criminal Justice Subcommittee would not have reported out the language that was embodied in H.R. 5445 without the support of the minority members.

We have agreed to support the further compromise embodied in the amendment to H.R. 5445 in order to facilitate our ultimate goal of ending as immediately as possible the misuse and abuse of civil RICO. Our support was premised on certain elements of the compromise.

First, H.R. 5445 provides for the immediate detrebling of damages in the vast majority of civil RICO actions. Automatic treble damges remain only if the suit is for injury to a government entity or if the plaintiff is seeking to collect treble damages from a defendant who first has been convicted of certain criminal acts. In the latter cases, treble damages can be collected only from the defendant who has been convicted.

All other plaintiffs, with one narrow exception, will be able to collect only actual damages plus attorney's fees. In particular, if the plaintiff's claim is based on behavior that falls within the coverage of State or Federal securites laws, then he cannot use civil RICO to collect anything beyond actual damages plus attorney's fees. Because one of our major concerns has been with the abuse of civil RICO to evade the standards and limitations of the securities laws, recovery under section 1964(c)(2)(B)(ii) would not be available to those plaintiffs who can collect on a securities law remedy.

But, moreover, recovery of punitive damages would not be available to a plaintiff when the alleged behavior of the defendant is remediable under securities laws. I must emphasize this focus on behavior and not on the ability to recover of a specific plaintiff. For it may be that the securities laws do not give that individual plaintiff standing to press the particular claim or he may have done something, or failed to do something, that renders an otherwise valid securities claim invalid. If the plaintiff is complaining of conduct that falls within the realm of the securities laws, so that those laws provide some sort of remedy, a plaintiff can no longer use civil RICO to create a multiple damage Federal remedy.

Second, this detrebling is to be effective immediately in virtually every case in which there has not yet been a jury verdict or judgment assessing liability against the defendant. We have provided one limited exception to that rule. It may be that, in the rare case, some peculiar circumstances will exist that justify resurrecting a plaintiff's ability to collect treble damages. The only instance that I can think of now would be where the plaintiff decided not to bring another valid treble-damage claim because he thought he had a RICO claim, and it is now too late to bring the other cause of action.

Simply because the plaintiff has pressed his case to a certain point, or does not have another treble damage remedy, will not be an adequate ground to let him seek treble damages. The bill explicitly makes the time cutoff the entry of judgment or a jury verdict; if the case has not gone that far, we have decided to remove the treble damages. Nor can there possibly be anything "unfair" about a plaintiff only being able to collect actual damages and attorney's fees simply because he has no other way to collect multiple damages. Actual damages is what a prevailing plaintiff normally recovers in Federal cases; even under this bill a plaintiff will have the unusual benefit of recovering his attorney's fees if he wins. Thus, the unfairness necessary to preserve the right to recover treble damages must be extraordinary and manifest.

Third, the statute of limitations is tied, in most cases, to the accrual of the plaintiff's cause of action or to the end of the injury to him, not to the last act in the alleged "pattern of illicit activity." In order to end the misuse of the statute, we had to eliminate the open-ended liability that exists under the current statute, which allows a plaintiff to revive claims for old injuries simply by linking them to a recent act in the alleged "pattern" of most recent vintage. H.R. 5445 eliminates that potential for this open-ended liability.

Fourth, we want to make sure the courts understand that the "pattern" requirement is intended to limit civil RICO to cases where there is persistent criminality as reflected in a series of criminal transactions or episodes, not just a single unlawful episode that includes several acts. The specific minimum requirements that we impose are necessary, but not necessarily sufficient, to the allegation of a "pattern" and not intended to limit further development of the law in the wake of the discussion in footnote 14 of the Sedima decision.

I have not touched upon all the elements of the compromise proposal. I reiterate the points I made during floor consideration of this bill concerning my hope for its further development consistent with the position I have supported from the beginning of the 99th Congress.

TRIBUTE TO MRS. MARIA RUSSO VALLUZZI

HON. ROBERT G. TORRICELLI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor of Mrs. Maria Russo Valluzzi of Hasbrouck Heights, NJ, on the occasion of her 100th birthday.

Mrs. Valluzzi reached the age of 100 on October 8, 1986. She was born in New York City, the child of Italian immigrants. Her husband, John Valluzzi was employed by the law enforcement agencies of Bergen County for 43 years.

Mrs. Valluzzi has lived from the age of gaslights and horse-drawn carriages to witness an American presence on the Moon and the atomic generator. Hers has been a full life enriched by 5 children, 11 grandchildren, 18 great grandchildren, and 6 great, great grandchildren.

We do her honor as she celebrates this significant milestone in her life. May she enjoy continued good health as she lives out her years with her loving family.

CHILD ADVOCACY UNIT

HON. THOMAS M. FOGLIETTA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. FOGLIETTA. Mr. Speaker, next year this Nation will celebrate the 200th anniversary of our Constitution. A major focal point of this celebration will be in Philadelphia, our first capital. Philadelphia is a city of many firsts.

One of our firsts is in the area of juvenile protection. Ten years ago, in 1976, the Child Advocacy Unit of the Defender Association of Philadelphia was established by Alice Tuohy O'Shea, Esq. It was the first court-approved federally funded effort to integrate the juvenile system with groups responsible for protecting the interests of dependent children.

Public Defenders are mandated to provide legal representation for the criminally indigent: children as well as adults. The child advocacy unit was approved by then chief defender Vincent Zaccardi out of concern that many children were going through the juvenile process without legal representation.

The child advocacy unit soon attracted supporters from throughout the judicial system by showing that it could be an effective tool for the prevention of juvenile delinquency at its first surfacing. These children were not perpetrating crimes but were high risk predelinquents who were innocent victims of societal or parental problems.

The child advocacy unit became fully operative in July 1976 under a Federal LEAA grant. The unit's original goal under judicial act was the protection of a child who was abused or neglected or deprived, and the representation of a child going through family court on involuntary commitments under the Mental Health and Mental Retardation Act of 1966.

As the new and intriguing legal concept took hold, an informal standard was developed by which judges could be guided in the appointment of child advocates in family court in Philadelphia. That standard was: "Where there is a divergence of interest between parent and child, the child should have independent legal representation." As judges rotated through Family Court to Adoptions, Women's Division, Domestic Relations, and Adult Court, those judges took the "divergence of interest" standard with them. They began appointing child advocates in areas of the law never anticipated by the defenders. The judges began appointing child advocates in:

First. Divorce Court, where the child had become a pawn between embittered and battling parents;

Second. Adoptions, where the mother had withdrawn consent after the child had been placed with the adoptive parents;

Third. Paternity suits where the mother was refusing visitation because the father was allegedly not the natural father, or was refusing to pay support for the child; and Fourth. Legal assistance to minor patient donors at Children's Hospital in Philadelphia.

All of these formalized procedures were legal breakthroughs on problems which had not been previously recognized in the law.

This is the Tenth Anniversary of the Child Advocacy Unit. In this decade, a body of lawyers and social workers realized three major accomplishments. They are:

First. Preventing juvenile delinquency: Children with problems which could lead to juvenile delinquency are being discovered before it is too late to assist them.

Second. Preventing continuing child abuse: Providing constant monitoring and assurances of mandated social services, medical care and educational progress for parents and children.

Third. Stabilizing family units: Getting at the root of societal and parental problems which are the cause of child abuse and which in turn are acted out by child victims who do not have the tools of judgment nor the life experience to make life directing decisions themselves.

This pioneering effort and its expertise and experience is available to other States and jurisdictions by the simple task of asking.

On this tenth anniversary of the Defender Child Advocacy Unit of Philadelphia, I ask my esteemed colleagues of the House of Representatives to join in acknowledging this dedicated group of lawyers, social workers and supportive staff who in their decade of service have legally represented tens of thousands of Philadelphia children.

Mr. Speaker, for this record I salute:

Attorneys, Alice Tuohy O'Shea, Esq. founder of Child Advocacy Unit, William Norvel, Esq. chief, Child Advocacy Unit, Mary Cole, Esq., Sarah Nerken, Esq., Valerie Jones, Esq., David Mullins, Esq., Gwendolyn Bright, Esq., Agnes Wilson, Esq., Julius Jackson, Esq., Shawn Lacy, Esq., Douglas Dick, Esq.

Social workers, Dr. Najma Davis, DSW, Michael Lewis, BSW, Charles McKinney, MSW, Thomas Curran, MSW, Claire Rosenstein, MSW, Samia Cherry, MSW, Ann Park, MSW, Jacqueline Robbins, BSW, James Bembrey, MSW, Michael Connery, BSW, MPsy, J.D., Esq.

Administrative staff, Jennifer Willis, Katherine Easton, Gerry Bussy, Jeanne McDevitt, Renee Evans, Debra Kessler.

Investigations, Robert Reed, Gloria Richardson.

And the many social service graduate and undergraduate students, and law students who had the opportunity of doing their practicums with the Defender Child Advocacy Unit and who contributed greatly to the growth and development of child advocacy in Philadelphia.

TAXATION OF MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES

HON. RICHARD A. GEPHARDT

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the House's attention to a problem that has arisen concerning the taxation of mutual life insurance companies under the provisions of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 (DEFRA). I am certain that the Congress intended to treat all segments of the life insurance industry fairly, but there is one provision of the 1984 legislation that has unintentionally caused considerable inequity in the taxation of small- to mid-sized mutual companies. This is not a situation where any company or group of companies is at fault; it is the law itself that creates these inequities. I also understand that the Treasury Department is unhappy with this key provision of the law which has proved very difficult to administer.

I am referring to section 809 of the Internal Revenue Code. In essence, this section establishes a special add-on tax for mutual companies only. The tax is calculated by assuming that all of the mutual companies—some 125 companies in all—are one big company. The problem with this approach is that there are tremendous disparities in the size of these mutual companies. If one of the huge companies has poor earnings, everyone else in the mutual segment experiences a tax increase, regardless of their own economic performance.

This is precisely what happened in 1984. Two of the large mutuals reported smaller than expected earnings, which caused every other company's taxes to be considerably higher than expected. Moreover, there is nothing a smaller company can do about this increased liability, and no way to anticipate it in their business planning. In short, this "socialization" of the mutual tax burden has created enormous problems for the great majority of mutual companies.

Section 809 was supposed to resolve the difficult question of how to divide the tax burden of the industry between stock and mutual segments. it is my hope that Congress, working with the Treasury Department and the insurance industry, can examine this issue next year to ensure that all segments of the mutual life insurance industry are treated equitably.

PJETER IVEZAJ IS COMING HOME

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted by the announcement that after several days of strong protest from this body and others, the Yugoslavian Government has decided to release Pjeter Ivezaj, an American citizen who was arrested in July while visiting his relatives in Yugoslavia.

I want to commend United States diplomats in Yugoslavia for negotiating the release of Mr. Ivezaj, and I want to extend special praise to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan, Mr. BROOMFIELD, for the leadership role he has played in bringing about this very positive development. In addition, I want to recognize the significant contribution the Albanian community in this country made to the successful resolution of this important case. It was largely through their vocal expression that we were informed of this human rights tragedy and we were moved to action. That was particularly true of the large Albanian community in my home area of New York City and Westchester County, where concerned members of the Albanian community, such as Peter Camaj and so many others, kept vigil over the plight of Pjeter Ivezaj and even traveled to Washington to ensure a strong U.S. Government response.

A strong U.S. response did occur and for good reason. Pjeter Ivezaj, who had emigrated to the United States in 1972 from Yugoslavia, became a United States citizen and works as a high school teacher in Sterling Heights, MI. As an ethnic Albanian, with a great love of life and basic freedoms, Mr. Ivezaj took part in protests in the United States against the ill treatment of Albanians in Yugoslavia. That was in 1981, and was typical of millions of other freedom loving Americans from all ethnic backgrounds who enjoy the fundamental right of freedom of expression. Mr. Ivezaj broke no U.S. law. In fact, his outspokenness about the ill treatment of his fellow man is encouraged and rewarded in this great country of ours.

However, the Communist Government of Yugoslavia had another view, and when Mr. Ivezaj traveled to Yugoslavia in July to visit his family there, he was promptly arrested for anti-Yugoslav activities associated with his protests here in America. That was a human rights violation of the highest order, but the situation only grew worse 2 days ago when Mr. Ivezaj was sentenced to 7 years in prison for his activities.

Fortunately, the Yugoslavian Government was persuaded to see the grave injustice they committed and they took corrective action. However, it seems likely that this happy ending to such a tragic story would never have happened if Pjeter Ivezaj was not an American citizen, with all our power at his disposal. But, what about the millions of other freedom lovers in Yugoslavia and other captive nations around the world? They are denied the freedom of expression, and when they do dare to speak out in protest of their repressive treatment, they are often imprisoned or otherwise persecuted. Until the day comes when the treatment of Pjeter Ivezaj is never repeated, not threatened, we, as leaders of the free world, cannot rest in our pursuit of basic human rights for all people.

Welcome back to freedom Pjeter Ivezaj and long live the freedom loving spirit of Albanians everywhere.

UNFAIR APPROACH TO GENERAL REVENUE SHARING FUNDING

HON. JIM ROSS LIGHTFOOT

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. LIGHTFOOT. Mr. Speaker, I am very disappointed by action taken by the Rules Committee with regard to funding for general revenue sharing in the continuing resolution, the omnibus appropriations bill for fiscal year 1987. As reported by the Appropriations Committee, this bill contained funding for general revenue sharing at a level equal to three-fourths of last year's level. The Appropriations Committee achieved this by making a small across-the-board cut in other funding in the bill. The bill was on its way to the floor of the House when members of the Rules Committee took it upon themselves to delete this funding from the bill without allowing Members an opportunity to offer an amendment to restore any of these funds or change the way in which they are allocated.

I recognize the tremendous pressure we are under to make significant reductions in the Federal deficit, which this year reached its all-time high. As my record clearly indicates, I have been a strong supporter of efforts to reduce the Federal deficit through reductions in Federal spending. However, in doing so I have tried very hard to maintain a standard of fairness. In voting for cuts in spending I have tried to ensure that no single sector of society would bear an unfair share of the burden of deficit reduction—whether it be education, senior programs, nutrition, or programs supported by general revenue sharing.

It is this basic standard of fairness that I believe is violated by the Rules Committee's action to delete all general revenue sharing funds from the fiscal year 1987 appropriations bill. This is particularly unfortunate in view of the fact that there are more constructive ways we could have approached the general revenue sharing dilemma. We could have reduced expenditures under the program by targeting the funds to the most needy communities. At the very least, we could have phased out the program over a number of years to give communities that rely heavily on general revenue sharing time to adjust. Almost every Federal program is taking a cut this year, but few are getting the rug completely pulled out from underneath them.

Last year the Government Operations Subcommittee on Intergovernmental Relations held a hearing at Council Bluffs, IA, which is located in my district. As a result of testimony presented at that hearing and others held by the subcommittee, as well as input from hundreds of my constituents, I acquired an appreciation for the importance of general revenue sharing to rural communities, particularly those located in the Farm Belt. One of the most attractive characteristics of the program is that it comes with few strings attached, letting the community, not the Washington bureaucracy, decide how the funds can best be used.

Earlier this year the Government Operations Committee, of which I am a member, passed a bill, H.R. 1400, to reauthorize general revenue sharing for an additional 3 years. Although I supported cuts in the program that I thought were fair, I voted for final passage of the bill in hopes of keeping the program alive in some form. I was looking forward to the fate of this program being determined by thorough debate on the floor of the House, not by a snap decision made by a few Members in a small committee room.

Mr. Speaker, at this time we do not appear to have an opportunity to restore funds for general revenue sharing. However, I remain committed to fair treatment of this program and I look forward to an opportunity to address this matter in that regard. I urge my colleagues on the Rules Committee to reverse their decision and allow general revenue sharing to come before the full House for debate.

INTRODUCTION OF OLDER AMERICANS SERVICE CREDIT DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM ACT OF 1986

HON. WILLIAM F. GOODLING

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. WYDEN] as an original co-sponsor of the Older Americans Service Credit Demonstration Program Act of 1986.

This measure would amend title IV of the Older Americans Act of 1965 and authorize the Commissioner on Aging to award grants to the States for demonstration projects designed to provide senior citizens with services in return for certain volunteer services provided by these seniors to other individuals.

I believe that the general concept underlying this proposal has merit and deserves careful consideration by the Committee on Education and Labor, on which I am privileged to serve, when it considers legislation to reauthorize the Older Americans Act. Clearly, the reauthorization of the Older Americans Act will be a top-priority item on the committee's agenda for the 100th Congress.

While I do have reservations regarding some provisions now incorporated in the bill, I am co-sponsoring this measure today so that it will be readily available to all interested parties for their review, comment, and recommendations.

TAIWAN'S MARTIAL LAW

HON. STEPHEN J. SOLARZ

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Speaker, Chiang Ching-kuo, the preeminent leader of Taiwan and head of the Nationalist Party, announced on Wednesday his intention to end martial law. The announcement itself is a significant step: With varying degrees of severity, martial law has been in effect since 1949. Yet friends of Taiwan and friends of democracy will also be watching with hope and expectation to see how the declared intention is transformed into reality.

The announcement that martial law will be lifted holds out the promise of a fully democratic political system. Whether this potential for pluralism will be fulfilled will be seen in the weeks and months ahead. It is my personal hope that the termination of martial law will result in guarantees of freedom of the press, freedom of expression, and freedom of assembly, in the legalization of the newly proclaimed Progressive Democratic Party and other parties which may be formed, and an increase in the number of elected officials in central representative and executive bodies.

At this juncture, however, I wish to pay tribute to President Chiang for taking this significant step. Partly as a result of his past efforts in the economic, social, and political field, the people on Taiwan have readied themselves to participate broadly in the political process. I am sure that they wait expectantly for the opportunity to do so.

THE SOVIET UNION AND THE HELSINKI FINAL ACT—PROBLEMS IN SOVIET OBSERVANCE OF PROVISIONS FOR THE FREE FLOW OF INFORMATION

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to call the attention of my colleagues to a coordinated initiative being undertaken by myself and other members of the International Parliamentary Group for Human Rights in the Soviet Union [IPG]. My IPG colleagues in the parliaments of many other Western countries will be addressing common themes regarding human rights in the Soviet Union in the coming weeks in their own home parliaments.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I would like to address an aspect of human rights which has become, in the wake of recent events, an even more important issue in Soviet human rights than was thought before—the free flow of information.

Nicholas Daniloff was freed last week, but not until after his basic human rights had been obstructed for 30 days and his liberties, as promised him through the Soviet agreement to the Helsinki Final Act, were denied. On November 4, 1986, the Vienna Review Conference of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe will convene. The Vienna conference will be the latest in a series of review conferences which periodically convene to review compliance among the 35 signatory states with all aspects of the Helsinki Final Act and to consider possible new commitments which the signatory states may wish to undertake.

According to Basket III of the Helsinki Final Act, the Soviet Union and the other 34 signatories pledged to:

Facilitate the freer and wider dissemination of information of all kinds, to encourage cooperation in the field of information and the exchange of information with other countries, and to improve the conditions under which journalists from one participating State exercise their profession in another participating State.

While the Soviet Union signed this document indicating its acceptance of these ideals over 15 years ago, in reality, the Soviet Union has attempted to control and restrict all facets of information flowing into and out of the country.

The Soviet Union restricts the free flow of information in three central areas: First, the broadcast and reception of international radio programs within the Soviet Union; second, the dissemination of Western information including newspapers, periodicals, and television; and third, working conditions of journalists within the Soviet Union.

To facilitate the freer and wider dissemination of information of all kinds:

First, in the area of broadcasting, the Soviets restrict the flow of information by jamming the incoming radio signal from foreign broadcasts. This is done by putting deliberate interference on the same frequency as the incoming signal so that listening to the broadcasts becomes exceedingly difficult.

Between 1975 and 1979, the Soviets ended jamming of Western broadcasts such as the BBC, Deutsche Welle, and the Voice of America. Since 1980, however, the Soviets have increased the scope and intensity of their jamming of such broadcasts by building additional jamming stations. To further discourage listening, the Soviets have made it illegal to disseminate false information based on foreign broadcasts.

To encourage cooperation in the field of information and the exchange of information with other countries:

Second, the Soviets restrict access to Western publications and strictly control the dissemination of all other forms of information entering the country. Western publications are often kept in closed stacks at public or university libraries and subscriptions by Soviet citizens is prohibited. There are very few Western television programs in the Soviet Union, and those which are shown have been edited according to strict ideological standards.

To improve the conditions under which journalists from one participating state exercise their profession in another participating state:

Finally, this area, Mr. Speaker, is one which, in the wake of the very recent arrest and detention of U.S. News and World Report journalist Nicholas Daniloff, the Soviet Union can obviously be held in tremendous violation of international standards. The case of Mr. Daniloff, while a glaring example of a horrible violation of this specific part of the Helsinki final act, must not be veiwed as an isolated one. Just 2 weeks ago, another journalist, this time Canadian, was detained in Moscow. Other journalists suffer constant harassment and are regularly threatened by the KGB with prosecution on baseless charges. Equally, Soviet journalists experience severe repression, including confinement in psychiatric hospitals, for writing any articles critical of the Soviet regime.

My colleagues and I in IPG believe that the free flow of information, as well as other issues in Soviet human rights performance, must remain squarely on the agenda at the Vienna Review Conference. We also believe that, as President Reagan and Secretary Gorbachev move toward a second summit and meet again in Iceland this week, that the issue of human rights must be placed on the forefront of the agenda. For it is only with agreement and adherence to such documents as the Helsinki final act, where human rights maintain a high profile, that we can go on to thinking about agreements in other areas of discord between our two countries. We must agree to treat our own people fairly and with respect to their fundamental rights as human beings, before we can negotiate about other matters of conflict.

Mr. Speaker, the democratic signatories of the Helsinki Final Act must strengthen their support for human rights in the Soviet Union. The democracies must insist that there be balanced progress in all areas of the final act if East-West relations are to improve. Thus, any new agreements in the areas of military, security, and economic relations reached in Vienna must be accompanied by similar accords in human rights and by guarantees of performance under existing agreements.

MS. JESALYNN WASHINGTON: BLIND WORKER OF THE YEAR

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to give proud recognition to a young woman who has been chosen this year's Peter J. Salmon Blind Worker of the Year. Ms. Jesalynn Washington was recently selected by National Industries for the Blind in cooperation with the General Council of Workshops for the Blind as the outstanding blind worker participating in the Javits-Wagner-O'Day Act Program. The Blind Worker of the Year Award was named after the late Dr. Peter J. Salmon, one of the Nation's leading contributors in the field of blindness and instrumental in the late 1930's in the passage of the Wagner-O'Day Act (now the Javits-Wagner-O'Day Act). The Javits-Wagner-O'Day Act provides meaningful and remunerative employment to thousands of blind Americans nationally.

Ms. Washington was born with congenital cataracts and, by the age of 16, her vision was reduced to light perception and shadows. She finds great determination from a sense of healthy competition. An example of this can be seen in her past accomplishments in swimming and running. She is active in her church by participating in both the choir and the church council.

For the past 11 years, Ms. Washington has been employed by the Blind Association of Western New York in Buffalo, NY. Although her vision is limited to light perception, she is proficient.

NATIONAL FORUM PROJECT

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, student leaders across America have embarked on an ambitious and laudatory project to educate themselves about nuclear arms. The resolution I am introducing today, with my colleague Mr. LEACH of Iowa, expresses the support of Congress for their efforts.

Begun by students at the Milton Academy in Milton, MA, the signature of every high school student in America on a petition requesting a nationally televised educational forum on nuclear arms, with President Reagan as a participant.

The forum will be educational and nonpartisan, presenting a full discussion of all opinions and viewpoints. There will be speeches by four nationally known experts, who will then be questioned by a panel of high school students.

The project has already received support from the National Convention of Student Council Presidents, the National Education Association, and the National Association of Secondary School Principals, which gave the project address labels for the 22,000 high schools in America. Volunteers have raised funds to mail the petitions, and have already met with executives at NBC, ABC, and CBS, who have expressed interest in the project.

This is a very ambitious undertaking which will obviously require the cooperative efforts of millions of youth. It is their way of trying to help themselves get more involved, to better understand what every American President since 1945 has agreed is the critical challenge of our age—nuclear arms.

We must support their desire for understanding of these complex questions. The "National Forum" project is not about telling them what to think. It is about giving them the information necessary to think for themselve.

It is, after all, soon going to be their world, and these will be their decisions. We should be proud of their desire to know, to involve each other in a broad-based young citizens, movement. It represents the best kind of student activism.

I am submitting this straightforward concurrent resolution in support of the "National Forum Project" for the RECORD.

H. CON. RES. 409

Concurrent resolution expressing the support of Congress for the petition drive of the National Forum requesting a televised educational forum on nuclear arms issues

Whereas high school students must be able to make informed decisions about the future of our country;

Whereas educating high school students regarding nuclear arms issues will help students make vital decisions on such issues;

Whereas free and open discussion is an important hallmark of American democracy; and

Whereas the National Forum is uniting high school students through a petition drive requesting the major television networks to hold a televised educational forum on nuclear arms issues: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress supports the National Forum in its effort to unite high school students through a petition drive requesting the major television networks to hold a televised educational forum on nuclear arms issues.

JOHNSTOWN LODGE OF ITALIAN SONS AND DAUGHTERS OF AMERICA HONORS STATE SENATOR MARK SINGEL

HON. JOHN P. MURTHA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to join with the Johnstown Lodge of the ISDA on October 25 in honoring State Senator Mark Singel.

A member of the Pennsylvania State Senate since 1980, Mark is particularly proud of his work on a low-interest loan program to help unemployed homeowners facing mortgage foreclosure. Mark is presently the Democratic Party's nominee for Lieutenant Governor, a position from which he would head the Governor's Energy Council and be able to give an additional boost to our coal efforts.

It has been a distinct pleasure over recent years to work with Mark on a number of projects for our area including road revitalization, employment opportunities, coal development, and community assistance.

Mark has brought to the State senate and to the present campaign an enthusiasm, dedication, and integrity that has been the hallmark of his public service career.

One of the keys to Mark's attitude was recently mentioned when he said he was tired of seeing people write off the manufacturing industry. Mark said we need to make an effort to try and do everything you can to help heavy industry, not just give it up for lost. That's the kind of "can do" philosophy that has symbolized Mark's career.

It's a pleasure to recognize his efforts and to look forward to working with Mark Singel for many more years to come.

LOUISVILLE TEAM TAKES NATIONAL TENNIS CHAMPIONSHIPS

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I commend to the attention of my colleagues the athletic achievements of a group of my friends from home who recently "brought home the gold" by winning the USTA/Volvo Tennis League National Championships at Seabrook Island Resort, Charleston, SC.

The league championships culminate a nationwide competition of adult tennis teams. On the road to the championship, the Louisville team took on all comers at the local, State, regional, and national levels. The Louisville team emerged as the only team with an unblemished record.

The Louisville area enjoys a strong local tradition of tennis excellence and, as a community, has hosted numerous national tournament events. Recently, Louisville was considered as the site of this year's Davis Cup finals because of its rich tennis tradition. This national championship will add to this tradition.

On another note, the Louisville contingent humbled much younger opponents in their march to the national title. The average age of the Louisville team is over 55 years "young"— the "youngest" is my friend, Sonny Bass, who is 65. For those like myself, who are in their fifth decade, this is sweet revenge on the baby boomer generation.

I am proud to be able to share with my colleagues the remarkable feat achieved by this group of athletes from my hometown, who have distinguished themselves, their city, and the sport of tennis.

At this point, I would like to recognize the members of the team who contributed their considerable talents to this championship season: Gary Tucker, coach/captain; Lewis "Sonny" Bass; Jerry Fangman; Tom Faszold; Charles Francke; Ted Hartmann; Cliff Johnson; Irv Kupper; Richard Schreck; Bill Spaulding; Rich Stuedle; and last, but certainly not least, my friend and fellow Notre Dame alumnus, Bill Welch.

TRIBUTE TO TOM LOEFFLER

SPEECH OF

HON. E de la GARZA

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 7, 1986

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, because I had a conference committee meeting which I could not leave, I did not have the opportunity to say "adios" to my coworker from the United States-Mexico border TOM LOEFFLER. In his years in Washington, TOMMY's made his mark. He's always kept his border beginnings in mind knowing whence he came.

His years in the Congress were made more productive by virtue of his splendid background of association with former President Ford as well as with former fellow Texan and U.S. Senator John Tower. As TOMMY LOEFFLER leaves us we can only say vaya con dios.

ED MARKEY DID NOT SABOTAGE THE PRICE-ANDERSON BILL

HON. AL SWIFT

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Speaker, today's Washington Post carried an article that describes the unsuccessful efforts to increase the nuclear industry's liability limits in the Price-Anderson Act. Three House committees, including the Energy and Commerce Committee on which I serve, have devoted substantial attention to this matter over the past year. It is disappointing to all of us that we will not be able to resolve the issue this year, and will have to start over again in the 100th Congress.

In the Post article, Ed Davis, a spokesman for the nuclear industry, charged that Ed Markey, chairman of the Energy Conservation and Power Subcommittee, was responsible for "sabotaging a compromise piece of legislation." I know Mr. Davis, and think highly of him; however, his statement in the Post is simply inaccurate. Ed Markey, along with many other members of the Energy and Commerce Committee, including Chairman DINGELL, RON WYDEN, DENNIS ECKART, and myself, sought a rule that would allow certain amendments to the floor vehicle. This was not an effort to sabotage a compromise bill. We were merely seeking to obtain the procedure we all understood would be followed when the compromise bill was drafted.

When our committee marked up H.R. 3653, the Price-Anderson bill, in July, we added several provisions that strengthened the legislation. Here is a brief description of the key strengthening amendments adopted by the Energy and Commerce Committee: the Markey amendment to automatically adjust Price-Anderson's liability limits so as to keep up with inflation; the Eckart amendment to apply Price-Anderson to nuclear accidents involving diverted materials; the Wyden amendment to require full compensation for victims of accidents at Federal nuclear reactors; and the Swift amendment to require automatic payment of compensation to victims of nuclear waste accidents.

As we negotiate a floor vehicle with our sister committees—Interior and Science and Technology—they were unwilling to accept any of our key amendments. Nevertheless, because we wanted to move the legislation along, we agreed to a floor vehicle without these key provisions, but with the understanding that we could offer amendments on the floor.

What happened after that was not sabotage of legislation. Rather, committee leaders continued to try to work out a bill that everyone, including the Energy and Commerce Committee, could unite behind on the floor. We all knew that negotiations with the other body would be tough, and that if we could work out our differences before going to the floor we would have a stronger hand. As it turned out, however, we were unable to agree upon a bill that we all could support. Unfortunately, by that time it was so late in the session that many members feared that amendments on the floor would disrupt the dynamics of the bill and prevent agreement with the other body.

No Members acted in bad faith. No one is to "blame." The so-called compromise bill was negotiated last August under one set of assumptions. By the time we got to the Rules Committee earlier this week, we were operating under entirely different circumstances.

When we take up Price-Anderson next year, I hope that we can do so without any misperceptions about what caused its demise this year. We had legitimate disagreements that simply could not get resolved before the calendar ran out. But to charge "sabotage" is neither accurate nor helpful to the process.

THE CENTENNIAL OF THE BAKERY, CONFECTIONERY AND TOBACCO WORKERS UNION, LOCAL 6

HON. ROBERT A. BORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. BORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize the outstanding contributions and dedication the members of the Bakery, Confectionery and Tobacco Workers Union, Local 6 of Philadelphia. The union will celebrate 100 years of service to its members and the city of Philadelphia on October 25. I ask my colleagues to join me as I salute this important group.

Founded in Philadelphia in 1886, local 6 began as a small group of German bakers who struggled for industry recognition and better working conditions. The journeymen bakers faced fierce opposition by the industry, and the union remained small until the passage of the National Industrial Recovery Act which was replaced by the National Labor Relations Act in 1935.

In 1942, the Bakery and Confectionery International Union conferred jurisdiction over the candy workers upon local 6. By 1978, the tobacco workers merged with the B&C to form the modern Bakery, Confectionery and Tobacco Workers Union.

Over the years, the union has faced and surmounted the challenges of increased automation of the industry and has been in the forefront of the fight for equal opportunity employment for minorities and women. Local 6 has also fought to improve the quality of life for its members outside the shop. For example, the union had conducted an outstanding drug counseling and rehabilitation program for its members and their families. Further, it has actively contributed to the Philadelphia community through its involvement with such charitable groups as the United Way.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend both the members and leaders of this important union for their dedication to fairness, equality, and an improved environment in the workplace. Clearly, the undying contribution of the forefathers of the union and the continued involvement of subsequent leaders has played an important role in the establishment of fair and adequate working conditions for individuals all over the city of Philadelphia. I rise to commend these individuals and I ask my colleagues to join me as I salute them on the 100th anniversary of their years of service to Philadelphia.

HAWKINS INDEPENDENT SCHOOL - DISTRICT INITIATES DRUG TESTING

HON. RALPH M. HALL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in tribute to a great group of students and a dedicated school superintendent and faculty—backed up by concerned parents and students in the Hawkins, TX, Independent School District—a part of my Fourth Congressional District in northeast Texas.

There is no way to express the pride I feel to Superintendent Coleman Stanfield, to John Chadwell, president of the District Health Committee, to Student Body President Deanna Jackson, and to C.A. Trent, president of the Hawkins Independent School Board, and members Glenn Jackson, Hugh Rutherford, Frank Rucker, Buddy Holmes, Gary Bowles, and Dennis Wright.

To reinforce House passed legislation to combat drug abuse, the Hawkins Independent School District has initiated a drug testing program for all junior and senior high school students who wish to participate in extracurricular activities. I commend this fine body of students and administrators for taking the steps to eliminate drug use in their community and in our Nation.

Public opinion polls show that Americans find the drug problem one of the most serious facing the Nation today and the Hawkins Independent School District echoed this by approving funds for a drug testing program.

Students will be tested for the use of 19 drugs including amphetamines, cocaine, marijuana, barbiturates, and steroids. Students who fail the test will be retested immediately. If students fail a second time, they will be suspended from participating in extracurricular activities for 90 days, but will not be suspended from school.

Two other Texas school districts have followed the precedent and have introduced drug testing for their athletes, but Hawkins is the first to extend it to all extracurricular activities.

I applaud this community's efforts to control a nationwide problem and hope that other school districts are quick to follow suit. The Wood County Community Health Risk Reduction Committee, and Project Director Mary Gunn, have helped to provide a noble pattern for others to follow.

Again—Mr. Speaker—and Members—I congratulate this great cooperative and productive program—and I am very lucky to represent and to associate with the citizens of Hawkins and Wood Counties—for they have evidenced the character to care and the ability to achieve.

SPRINGTIME IN FREMANTEL, AUSTRALIA

HON. DUNCAN HUNTER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, it's springtime in Fremantel, Australia. The breezes are light and the water is calm, but there's something happening in the land Down Under. I doubt the Australians are happy about it. The team from New Zealand is tied for first place—with an American team. Not just any American Yachting team but the Stars and Stripes from my home, San Diego.

With a record of 4-0 in the first series, the Stars and Stripes is well on its way to bringing the Victorian trophy back to America to a new home on the golden shores of San Diego.

I realize, as you do, that we are only at the beginning of a three-round series of eliminations. Having defeated two Italian teams, the Italia and Azura, Newport Beach's Eagle, and Great Britain's White Crusader, we have to meet all 13 of the entries again in two more rounds. But since the Stars and Stripes is handling the light spring breezes better than many had expected, I'm confident that they will fare just as well when summer's 25-knot gusts arrive. With traditional American confidence, we look forward to seeing Dennis Conner and his outstanding crew sailing to victory in January.

After having the prize on the east coast for 132 years and in Australia for the last 4, we look forward to welcoming the cup to its new home in San Diego. However, we don't want the Aussies to be distraught over their loss. I'm positive they'll see the cup again; San Diego is beautiful year round, and they have my personal invitation to visit as often as they like.

HONORING JOHN FITZGIBBONS ON HIS RETIREMENT

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 10, 1986

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to mark the retirement of John Fitzgibbons, longtime educator in the Westfield public schools.

Jack Fitzgibbons began his long and impressive career as a teacher at the Granville Elementary School in 1957 before moving to the Westfield public school system.

During the next 23 years, Jack faithfully remained at the Abner Gibbs School and the Westfield Middle School, where he affected the lives of thousands of young students. However, I would like to point out that his efforts did not stop there. Along with his commitments to the above-mentioned schools, Jack accepted additional responsibilities as the Director of the Head Start Program and as a driver education instructor at the Westfield High School.

It is infrequent in this age to find a person who has demonstrated the strong sense of commitment it requires to serve the same system for such a long period of time. The people of Westfield can take pride in the fact that faithful and consistent work of someone such as Jack Fitzgibbons is responsible for the success of our Nation's youth.

I salute Mr. Fitzgibbons for a successful career as an educator, a citizen, and as a truly outstanding human being. However, as much as I am glad to have been given this opportunity to speak on his behalf, the pleasure is diluted in the knowledge that Jack Fitzgibbons will leave a void in the public school system of Westfield that will not easily be filled.

SENATE—Tuesday, October 14, 1986

The Senate met at 10 a.m., and was called to order by the Honorable MALCOLM WALLOP, a Senator from the State of Wyoming.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

God that made the world and all things therein, seeing that He is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands; neither is worshipped with men's hands, as though He needed anything, seeing He giveth to all life and breath and all things. * * *—Acts 17:24-25.

God of creation, in whom we live and move and have our being, You know the mixed emotions present in hearts and minds as the Senate begins its second overtime. May we remember that You are the author of all things—life and breath and time and energy. May this profound reality relax tension, reduce pressure within, and bring peace and quiet and confidence to our hearts. Fill this Chamber with Your presence. Work Your will in our midst. In spite of contrary feelings, transform this week into one of surprising achievement and blessing. For the glory of Your name, and the benefit of all who labor here. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND).

The assistant legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, October 14, 1986.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of Rule I, Section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable MALCOLM WALLOP, a Senator from the State of Wyoming, to perform the duties of the Chair.

STROM THURMOND,
President pro tempore.

Mr. WALLOP thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the distinguished Presiding Officer, Senator WALLOP, of Wyoming.

SCHEDULE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, under the standing order, the leaders have 10 minutes each, and then we have routine morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 11 a.m. with Senators permitted to speak therein for not more than 5 minutes each.

Following morning business, the Senate will turn to any of the following items: The reconciliation conference report; which is not available. So we will not turn to that one. The continuing resolution conference report; which is not available. So we cannot turn to that one. The debt limit conference report; which is not available. So we cannot turn to that one. The House message to accompany the drug bill; we do have a cloture motion filed on that. That vote will occur tomorrow unless, and hopefully, today we can negotiate.

There are negotiations under way to see if we might avoid a cloture vote. I hope we can resolve that today. I know we still have the tax bill. That is still here. The tax reform package is still here because the chairman of the Finance Committee wanted to pass the concurrent resolution to accompany the conference report on the tax bill. And I am hoping that he might be willing to start the discussion on the concurrent resolution at 11 o'clock this morning.

I think I indicated last Friday that there would not be any votes before 2 or 3 o'clock. I think we can work that out either way—either 2 or 3.

We are also trying to arrange a meeting of all Senators with Secretary Shultz to discuss the meetings in Iceland, and to answer any questions.

We are trying to find a suitable time. As soon as we can get a couple of options, I will be in touch with the minority leader to see if we can agree on a time. Room 207 is available at 3 o'clock. Prior to that time, we would need to go to room 407. I am not certain whether the distinguished minority leader is having a policy luncheon or not. We will work it out.

In any event, we would like to turn to the Executive Calendar to bring up the Malone nomination. I know there is some opposition to that nomination. I am not certain how strong it is. We are trying to work with Members on our side who have holds on other nominations—not on the other side but on our side.

One way to help that process is to bring up the Malone nomination. I understand from Senator HELMS that if we can agree to vote on the Malone nomination, he would also withdraw his opposition to Mr. Corr, who has been on the calendar—how long?

Mr. BYRD. Too long.

Mr. DOLE. Too long. That is right—for 1 year. He will be retired before we act if we do not hurry. [Laughter.]

So we hope to do those things.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, before the majority leader goes to another subject, if he will yield, as I listened to the outline of the program by the majority leader, the question comes to my mind as to whether or not the Senate and the House can indeed adjourn sine die by close of tomorrow, Wednesday. I think it is impossible. Would the majority leader agree with that?

Mr. DOLE. It seems to me that we are not going to be able to do it. I know many Members would like to do it. We at least ought to be able to finish the CR. Otherwise, we have to pass another extension, or the Government will shut down Thursday morning.

I am also advised on this side that there will be some—I do not know how lengthy—discussion on the debt limit extension.

There will be an effort to either amend Gramm-Rudman or send it back for a 6-month extension rather than 1 year. So they have an opportunity to amend it sometime in the spring. So that could take some time. I am not certain. There may be separate votes on the continuing resolution, also.

Mr. BYRD. Does the majority leader feel that with this schedule he has outlined we would expect to adjourn sine die before Friday?

Mr. DOLE. I would hope so.

I was heartened to read somewhere—I cannot remember where—but it was heartening to read that the majority leader in the House, Congressman WRIGHT, had hoped to conclude business by Wednesday. That is what he hoped to do.

Mr. BYRD. Hope springs eternal. [Laughter.]

Let me ask one other question while I am interrupting the distinguished majority leader.

On the nominations, I would hope that the administration would not make any recess appointments. We have had some discussion with the administration on this point before. The distinguished majority leader and I have taken the same position as being opposed to that. This then brings me to the further thought that if we are going to get these nominations up, I would hope the leader would move to take them up. I do not want to see any recess appointments.

Mr. DOLE. I would rather not see any. In fact, I have already indicated to the White House liaison that if in fact there is some extraordinary circumstance, they should be notifying us.

There could be exceptions. But it would be appreciated if we had some advance notice.

Mr. BYRD. Yes. If there is an exception, it would seem to me it should only fall in the category of something such as a vacancy that is not foreseen at this time while the Congress is in session because if there is any great need that is foreseen at this time, we ought to try to deal with it.

Mr. DOLE. I know of one case where the nomination is being held up, and has not been sent to the Senate because of the health of the spouse. It is an ambassadorial post where they have indicated that—in this case the husband is the nominee—the wife has just undergone cancer surgery. That has been held up. She is recovering very nicely but that has delayed that nomination. In a case like that, perhaps we can discuss it with the minority leader.

Mr. BYRD. I am encouraged to know that the distinguished majority leader shares my feeling on the matter, and that he has taken a position with the White House that there should not be any recess appointments.

□ 1010

Does the majority leader know of anything that can be foreseen at this time?

Mr. DOLE. That was why I referred to the nominees this morning. It might break the logjam.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the majority leader.

AL ULLMAN, FORMER CHAIRMAN OF THE HOUSE WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, last Saturday a friend and former colleague, Al Ullman, died after an 11-year struggle with cancer.

Al and I served in the House together. But it was as a member of the Finance Committee that I really became acquainted with Al Ullman.

While he may not have been as colorful, or combative, as some of his Ways and Means chairman predecessors, Al Ullman carved out his own piece of legislative history. Under his leadership, the House passed several major tax reform bills in the late 1970's, as well as dozens of measures dealing with health, welfare, and Social Security issues.

Al was not a confrontational legislator—he believed in quiet negotiations and compromise. Having served on the Ways and Means Committee for 14 years before he became chairman, he was well equipped to be a very effective proponent of the House's position. And he was.

Because of the prominence of the Ways and Means chairmanship, many people forget that Al was one of the first advocates of budget reform. He was instrumental in crafting the 1974 Budget Act, and served as the first chairman of the House Budget Committee.

Throughout his 24-year House career, Al Ullman provided sincere, honest and enlightened leadership. It is a record of public service his family should be justly proud of.

I know my colleagues will join me in extending our condolences to the entire Ullman family, and his many friends in Oregon and here in Washington.

THE POST-REYKJAVIK SITUATION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I think we all listened to the President. I must say that I have not been surprised but pleased that there has not been an outburst of partisan reaction to what happened in Iceland. I think the President, as I view it, did precisely what we would expect him to do.

Last night he outlined in context what really happened. Two things emerge most clearly from the President's speech.

First, it was Gorbachev, and Gorbachev alone, who bears the responsibility for scuttling the most promising arms control negotiations in history. Nearly a year ago, at the Geneva summit, the Soviet leader had agreed that progress on INF and long-range missiles was possible independent—and I say independent—of negotiations over star wars. That appeared to be the message of the initial, hopeful talks in Reykjavik, too.

By all accounts, the President and Gorbachev had achieved near final and unconditional agreement, on the total elimination of medium-range missiles in Europe, and a 5-year, 50-percent reduction in long-range missiles—an astounding arms reduction accomplishment. Yet, at the last minute, Gorbachev sunk that apparent accord under the weight of a new, unacceptable and irrational demand—that the President essentially give up any realistic possibility of determining the feasibility, and functions, of a strategic defense system. In effect, Gorbachev issued an ultimatum—give us what we want on star wars or there is no deal, period.

There is no way this President is going to give in to that kind of blackmail. And no reason that he should. Instead, the President offered a counterproposal.

Many said he would not do it. Some would probably disagree with him for doing it. But he offered a counterproposal addressing Gorbachev's obvious concerns about SDI.

The President went the extra mile, to determine if Gorbachev really was interested in the kind of comprehensive agreement that seemed possible earlier in the talks. But Gorbachev gave his answer to that proposal, too—a resounding "nyet."

Yet, despite all that, the President sent a second, clear message last night—that he remains as determined as ever to achieve the kind of real nuclear arms reductions that, for a time, appeared in prospect in Reykjavik. The President reiterated that the invitation to a U.S. summit is still open, if Gorbachev will only accept it; that our proposals are still on the table, if Gorbachev will only give them serious consideration; that progress on arms control, and the other issues on the table in Geneva, is still there to be made. If Gorbachev will only seize the opportunity.

The President has done his part. I hope the Congress will do its part, too—by standing with the President; by supporting the policies, and programs, which have brought us so far, and so close to real nuclear arms reductions; and by denying to Gorbachev, through our actions, the prize he gambled on, and lost, through his grandstand play in Reykjavik.

If we do what we should, then Reykjavik, in retrospect, can be a decisive turn on the road toward greater security for our country and peace for the world.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following my statement, the President's speech to the American people last night be included as part of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the remarks of the President were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TEXT OF THE PRESIDENT'S SPEECH

Good evening. As most of you know, I have just returned from meetings in Iceland with the leader of the Soviet Union, General Secretary [Mikhail] Gorbachev. As I did last year when I returned from the summit conference in Geneva, I want to take a few moments tonight to share with you what took place in these discussions.

The implications of these talks are enormous and only just beginning to be understood. We proposed the most sweeping and generous arms-control proposal in history. We offered the complete elimination of all ballistic missiles—Soviet and American—from the face of the Earth by 1996. While we parted company with this American offer still on the table, we are closer than ever before to agreements that could lead to a safer world without nuclear weapons.

But first, let me tell you that, from the start of my meetings with Mr. Gorbachev, I have always regarded you, the American people, as full participants. Believe me, without your support, none of these talks could have been held, nor could the ultimate aims of American foreign policy—world peace and freedom—be pursued. And it is for these aims I went the extra mile to Iceland.

Before I report on our talks though, allow me to set the stage by explaining two things that were very much a part of our talks, one a treaty and the other a defense against nuclear missiles which we are trying to develop. You've heard their titles a thousand times—the ABM treaty and SDI. Those letters stand for Anti-Ballistic Missile and Strategic Defense Initiative.

Some years ago, the U.S. and the Soviet Union agreed to limit any defense against nuclear missile attacks to the emplacement in one location in each country of a small number of missiles capable of intercepting and shooting down incoming nuclear missiles—thus leaving our real defense a policy called Mutual Assured Destruction, meaning if one side launched a nuclear attack, the other could retaliate. This mutual threat of destruction was believed to be a deterrent against either side striking first.

So here we sit with thousands of nuclear warheads targeted on each other and capable of wiping out both our countries. The Soviets deployed the few anti-ballistic missiles around Moscow as the treaty permitted. Our country didn't bother deploying because the threat of nationwide annihilation made such limited defense seem useless.

For some years now, we have been aware that the Soviets may be developing a nationwide defense. They have installed a large modern radar at Krasnoyarsk, which we believe is a critical part of a radar system designed to provide radar guidance for anti-ballistic missiles protecting the entire nation. This is a violation of the ABM treaty.

Believing that a policy of mutual destruction and slaughter of their citizens and ours was uncivilized, I asked our military a few years ago to study and see if there was a practical way to destroy nuclear missiles after their launch but before they can reach their targets, rather than to just destroy people.

This is the goal for what we call SDI, and our scientists researching such a system are convinced it is practical and that, several years down the road, we can have such a system ready to deploy. Incidentally, we are not violating the ABM treaty, which permits such research. If and when we deployed SDI, the treaty also allows withdrawal from the ABM treaty upon six months' notice. SDI, let me make it clear, is a nonnuclear defense.

THF AGENDA AT ICELAND

So here we are at Iceland for our second such meeting. In the first, and in the months in between, we have discussed ways to reduce and in fact eliminate nuclear weapons entirely. We and the Soviets have had teams of negotiators in Geneva trying to work out a mutual agreement on how we could reduce or eliminate nuclear weapons. So far, no success.

On Saturday and Sunday, General Secretary Gorbachev and his Foreign Minister [Eduard] Shevardnadze and Secretary of State George Shultz and I met for nearly 10 hours. We didn't limit ourselves to just arms reductions. We discussed what we call violation of human rights on the part of the Soviets, refusal to let people emigrate from Russia so they can practice their religion without being persecuted, letting people go to rejoin their families, husbands and wives separated by national borders being allowed to reunite.

In much of this, the Soviet Union is violating another agreement—the Helsinki Accords they had signed in 1975. Yuri Orlov, whose freedom we just obtained, was imprisoned for pointing out to his government its violations of the pact, its refusal to let citizens leave their country or return.

We also discussed regional matters such as Afghanistan, Angola, Nicaragua and Cambodia. But by their choice, the main subject was arms control.

We discussed the emplacement of intermediate-range missiles in Europe and Asia and seemed to be in agreement they could be drastically reduced. Both sides seemed willing to find a way to reduce even to zero the strategic ballistic missiles we have aimed at each other. This then brought up the subject of SDI.

I offered a proposal that we continue our present research, and if and when we reached the stage of final testing, we would sign now a treaty that would permit Soviet observation of such tests. And if the program was practical, we would both eliminate our offensive missiles and then we would share the benefits of advanced defenses. I explained that, even though we would have done away with our offensive ballistic missiles, having the defense would protect against cheating or the possibility of a madman sometime deciding to create nuclear missiles. After all, the world now knows how to make them. I likened it to our keeping our gas masks even though the nations of the world had outlawed poison gas after World War I.

We seemed to be making progress on reducing weaponry, although the general secretary was registering opposition to SDI and proposing a pledge to observe ABM for a number of years as the day was ending.

Secretary Shultz suggested we turn over the notes our note-takers had been making of everything we'd said to our respective teams and let them work through the night to put them together and find just where we were in agreement and what differences separated us. With respect and gratitude, I can inform you they worked through the night till 6:30 a.m.

Yesterday, Sunday morning, Mr. Gorbachev and I, with our foreign ministers, came together again and took up the report of our two teams. It was most promising. The Soviets had asked for a 10-year delay in the deployment of SDI programs.

In an effort to see how we could satisfy their concerns while protecting our principles and security, we proposed a 10-year period in which we began with the reduction of all strategic nuclear arms, bombers, air-launched cruise missiles, intercontinental ballistic missiles, submarine-lanuched ballistic missiles and the weapons they carry. They would be reduced 50 percent in the first five years. During the next five years, we would continue by eliminating all remaining offensive ballistic missiles, of all ranges. During that time, we would proceed with research, development and testing of SDI—all done in conformity with ABM provisions. At the 10-year point, with all ballistic missiles eliminated, we could proceed to deploy advanced defenses, at the same time permitting the Soviets to do likewise.

THE DEBATE ON SDI

Here the debate began. The general secretary wanted wording that in effect would have kept us from developing the SDI for the entire 10 years. In effect, he was killing SDI and, unless I agreed, all that work toward eliminating nuclear weapons would go down the drain—canceled.

I told him I had pledged to the American people that I would not trade away SDI—there was no way I could tell our people their government would not protect them against nuclear destruction. I went to Reykjavik determined that everything was negotiable except two things, our freedom and our future.

I am still optimistic that a way will be found. The door is open, and the opportunity to begin eliminating the nuclear threat is within reach.

So you can see, we made progress in Iceland. And we will continue to make progress if we pursue a prudent, deliberate, and, above all, realistic approach with the Soviets. From the earliest days of our administration, this has been our policy. We made it clear we had no illusions about the Soviets or their ultimate intentions. We were publicly candid about the critical moral distinctions between totalitarianism and democracy. We declared the principal objective of American foreign policy to be not just the prevention of war but the extension of freedom. And, we stressed our commitment to the growth of democratic government and democratic institutions around the world.

That is why we assisted freedom fighters who are resisting the imposition of totalitarian rule in Afghanistan, Nicaragua, Angola, Cambodia and elsewhere. And, finally, we began work on what I believe most spurred the Soviets to negotiate seriously—rebuilding our military strength, reconstructing our strategic deterrence, and, above all, beginning work on the Strategic Defense Initiative.

And yet at the same time we set out these foreign policy goals and began working toward them, we pursued another of our major objectives: that of seeking means to lessen tensions with the Soviets and ways to prevent war and keep the peace.

This policy is now paying dividends. One sign of this in Iceland was the progress on the issue of arms control. For the first time in a long while, Soviet-American negotiations in the area of arms reductions are moving and moving in the right direction: not just toward arms control but toward arms reduction.

PROGRESS ON OTHER ISSUES

But for all the progress we made on arms reductions, we must remember there were other issues on the table in Iceland, issues that are fundamental.

As I mentioned, one such issue is human rights. As President [John F.] Kennedy once said, "And, is not peace, in the last analysis, basically a matter of human rights?"

I made it plain that the United States would not seek to exploit improvement in these matters for purposes of propaganda. But I also made it plain, once again, that an improvement of the human condition within the Soviet Union is indispensable for an improvement in bilateral relations with the United States. For a government that will break faith with its own people cannot be trusted to keep faith with foreign powers. So I told Mr. Gorbachev, again in Reykjavik as I had in Geneva, we Americans place far less weight upon the words that are spoken at meetings such as these than upon the deeds that follow. When it comes to human rights and judging Soviet intentions, we are all from Missouri: You have got to show us.

Another subject area we took up in Iceland also lies at the heart of the differences between the Soviet Union and America. This is the issue of regional conflicts. Summit meetings cannot make the American people forget what Soviet actions have meant for the peoples of Afghanistan, Central America, Africa and Southeast Asia. Until Soviet policies change, we will make sure that our friends in these areas, those who fight for freedom and independence, will have the support they need.

Finally, there was a fourth item. This area was that of bilateral relations, people-to-people contacts. In Geneva last year, we welcomed several cultural-exchange accords; in Iceland, we saw indications of more movement in these areas. But let me say now the United States remains committed to people-to-people programs that could lead to exchanges between not just a few elite but thousands of everyday citizens from both our countries.

So I think then you can see that we did make progress in Iceland on a broad range of topics. We reaffirmed our four-point agenda; we discovered major new grounds of agreement; we probed again some old areas of disagreement.

IN DEFENSE OF SDI

And let me return again to the SDI issue. I realize some Americans may be asking tonight: Why not accept Mr. Gorbachev's demand? Why not give up SDI for this agreement?

The answer, my friends, is simple. SDI is America's insurance policy that the Soviet Union would keep commitments made at Reykjavik. SDI is America's security guarantee if the Soviets should, as they have done too often in the past, fail to comply with their solemn commitments. SDI is what brought the Soviets back to arms-control talks at Geneva and Iceland. SDI is the key to a world without nuclear weapons.

The Soviets understand this. They have devoted far more resources for a lot longer time than we, to their own SDI. The world's only operational missile defense today surrounds Moscow, the capital of the Soviet Union.

What Mr. Gorbachev was demanding at Reykjavik was that the United States agree to a new version of a 14-year-old ABM treaty that the Soviet Union has already violated. I told him we don't make those kinds of deals in the United States.

And the American people should reflect on these critical questions: How does a defense of the United States threaten the Soviet Union or anyone else? Why are the Soviets so adamant that America remain forever vulnerable to Soviet rocket attack? As of today, all free nations are utterly defenseless against Soviet missiles, fired either by accident or design. Why does the Soviet Union insist that we remain so, forever?

So, my fellow Americans, I cannot promise, nor can any president promise, that the talks in Iceland or any future discussions with Mr. Gorbachev will lead inevitably to great breakthroughs or momentous treaty signings.

We will not abandon the guiding principle we took to Reykjavik. We prefer no agreement than to bring home a bad agreement to the United States.

LIKELIHOOD OF SUMMIT IN U.S.

And on this point, I know you are also interested in the question of whether there will be another summit. There was no indication by Mr. Gorbachev as to when or whether he plans to travel to the United States, as we agreed he would last year in Geneva. I repeat tonight that our invitation stands and that we continue to believe additional meetings would be useful. But that's a decision the Soviets must make.

But whatever the immediate prospects, I can tell you that I am ultimately hopeful about the prospects for progress at the summit and for world peace and freedom. You see, the current summit process is very different from that of previous decades. It is different because the world is different, and the world is different because of the hard work and sacrifice of the American people during the past 5½ years. Your energy has restored and expanded our economic might; your support has restored our military strength. Your courage and sense of national unity in times of crisis have given pause to our adversaries, heartened our friends and inspired the world.

The western democracies and the NATO [North Atlantic Treaty Organization] alliance are revitalized and, all across the world, nations are turning to democratic ideas and the principles of the free market. So because the American people stood guard at the critical hour, freedom has gathered its forces, regained its strength and is on the march.

So, if there is one impression I carry away with me from these October talks, it is that, unlike the past, we are dealing now from a position of strength, and for that reason we have it within our grasp to move speedily with the Soviets toward even more breakthroughs.

Our ideas are out there on the table. They won't go away. We are ready to pick up where we left off. Our negotiators are heading back to Geneva, and we are prepared to go forward whenever and wherever the Soviets are ready. So, there is reason, good reason, for hope.

I saw evidence of this in the progress we made in the talks with Mr. Gorbachev. And I saw evidence of it when we left Iceland yesterday, and I spoke to our young men and women at our naval installation at Keflavik, a critically important base far closer to Soviet naval bases than to our own coastline.

As always, I was proud to spend a few moments with them and thank them for their sacrifice and devotion to country. They represent America at her finest: committed to defend not only our own freedom but the freedom of others who would be living in a far more frightening world were it not for the strength and resolve of the United States.

"Whenever the standard of freedom and independence has been . . . unfurled, there will be America's heart, her benedictions and her prayers," John Qunicy Adams once said. He spoke well of our destiny as a nation. My fellow Americans, we are honored by history, entrusted by destiny with the oldest dream of humanity—the dream of lasting peace and human freedom.

Another president, Harry Truman, noted that our century had seen two of the most frightful wars in history. And that "the supreme need of our time is for man to learn to live together in peace and harmony."

It is in pursuit of that ideal I went to Geneva a year ago and to Iceland last week. And it is in pursuit of that ideal that I thank you now for all the support you have given me, and I again ask for your help and your prayers as we continue our journey toward a world where peace reigns and freedom is enshrined.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD at this point an article appearing in the Washington Post, written by George F. Will and entitled "The President's Finest Hour," and an additional article from the New York Daily News entitled "Echoes From Iceland: Reagan Stood Firm."

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Oct. 14, 1986]

THE PRESIDENT'S FINEST HOUR

(By George F. Will)

It was the president's finest hour.

In an odd place, at an unauspicious moment, he gave a watching world the most important moment of presidential decisiveness since President Truman picked up Stalin's gauntlet and committed the nation to the policy of containment. And he gave the nation a clinic in leadership: with his mind on future generations, not the next election, he spurned the short-term applause that comes automatically to any president who signs any arms-control agreement.

Iceland, where surveys reveal that 55 percent of the population believes in elves, was a suitable place for a summit clamored for by people who believe in arms control as the key to taming the Soviet Union. The Iceland summit was the most successful U.S. summit. Although the air is thick with lamentations from arms-control enthusiasts, the president may almost have made the arms-control "process" palatable to people who are skeptical about its utility and even its safety.

He did this by demonstrating something that there were abundant reasons for doubting: he demonstrated that a president can go to a summit and dare to return without an agreement.

Summitry is a part of the arms-control "process." Summits have come to be regarded as events where arms-control agreements are consummated. A dangerous asymmetry in this process is that Western public opinion is the only public opinion that matters in this process, and Western publics have never met an arms-control agreement they did not like. (Never mind that they have never met an arms-control agreement that seriously controlled arms.)

It may be the case that, by venturing to Iceland for that fast-food summit, the president strode into what the Soviet side fancied was a clever trap—a heads-we-win, tails-you-lose situation. They would either kill the Strategic Defense Initiative or vilify it as the only impediment to arms reductions so comprehensive as to constitute the termination of the Cold War.

However, it is almost certainly wrong to think, as many even in the administration may think, that important agreements really were within reach regarding intermediate-range and strategic missiles. It is probable that the Soviet offers and expressions of interest were designed in large measure to contribute to the orchestrated euphoria, the collapse of which was counted on to deepen resentment of SDI. And if the president had, to the Soviet's surprise, killed SDI to get Soviet agreement to cuts, it is probable that many of the cuts would have been vitiated in years of negotiations about details, in cheating, and in deployments of new weapons not covered by any Iceland agreements.

One reason for believing that the Iceland outcome was the one the Soviet side aimed for is that their crucial demand was an act of brazen overreaching. They sought a revision of the ABM treaty—a "strengthening" of the treaty that would have suffocated SDI by confining research to the laboratory. The Soviets could not seriously have expected the president to eviscreate his presidency by suddenly scrapping a program that he has advocated with the most intense moral and prudential arguments.

But, then, brazenness is not in short supply in the Soviet regime that speaks of "strengthening" an ABM treaty it is flagrantly violating, a regime that stigmatizes SDI as highly imprudent and immoral, yet has spent far more on defensive systems than has the United States.

Certainly the Iceland outcome will enable Gorbachev to fan the flames of anti-Americanism among the European left. But it is equally certain that no president can make policy hostage to the hopeless and squalid project of trying to dampen Europe's appeasement reflex.

In the networks' rush to judgment on Iceland, the editorializing was as clear as it was unconscious. The outcome was called a "collapse" of the summit, a collapse that dashed hopes of "progress" and knocked U.S.-Soviet relations "off the rails." The word "collapse" implies calamity; the word "progress" is defined exclusively in terms of the achievement of agreements. And what is one to make of the "rails" metaphor? What rails were the relationship on before Iceland?

"Collapse" implies disorder. The Iceland outcome was an orderly result of an orderly assessment. That is progress of the highest sort—progress toward realism.

Perhaps the Iceland outcome will confer the ancillary blessing of putting an end to the nonsense about the president and the first lady being mesmerized by arms-control agreements as guarantors of his "place in history." Both he and she know that every president since the onset of the U.S.-Soviet arms-control process 17 years ago has achieved an "arms-control agreement" (counting, as one should, the Ford-Brezhnev agreement at Vladivostok). Mr. and Mrs. Reagan know that it is nonsense on stilts to say that arms-control agreements sealed for Nixon, Ford and Carter enviable "places in history."

The arms-control "process" has indeed now given this president the high place in history that was waiting for the first president who would show that it is possible to "just say no."

ECHOES FROM ICELAND: REAGAN STOOD FIRM

Cut through all the other arguments and one thing is clear about the iced-over meeting in Iceland: Mikhail Gorbachev came for a single reason: To get a hard freeze of the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative—SDI, long ridiculed by its critics as Star Wars. President Reagan said no. Gorbachev went home.

No deal. No Russian or American made a dime.

Hold on a minute. Isn't SDI—at least to the people who call it Star Wars—a technically impossible, strategically hopeless fantasy plan?

Not to Mikhail Gorbachev. Not with the entire Soviet military, intelligence and planning capacity at his fingertips. Not in Iceland, where he played a one-hand game with his eye on that single chip.

Reagan was right to stand firm.

There can be no more important challenge in modern history than reducing the danger of obliterating life on this planet. No sane, even faintly informed, person can deny that danger is real, and great.

But, maddening as it sometimes is to people, one truth must prevail: The preservation of nuclear deterrence is the element of stability without which all others would fail.

There are tens of thousands of nuclear weapons in the arsenals of the U.S., USSR, Britain, France, China and, most probably, a half-dozen less advanced military powers. The numbers are increasing. It would be grossly irresponsible to bet the Earth's life on the hope that human decency will prevent their use.

That is where SDI's value lies. Its purpose is to produce a system of vehicles in space that would knock out nuclear missiles after they were launched and before they reached their targets. Its technical development is moving along faster than its supporters expected.

SDI's harshest critics dismiss it on the contention that it could never knock out all launched weapons. That's specious: The idea is that even if SDI crippled half, only a quarter of the missiles launched in an all-out Soviet strike, it would radically change the expectations of Soviet success. That is what deterrence is all about.

Gorbachev realizes that—his entire Iceland escapade demonstrates that. He also recognizes that bargaining down missiles or warheads over a long schedule invites reneging and other manipulation. And that nothing now known would more surely keep the Soviets from such manipulation as would SDI.

If the U.S.—led by Reagan or one of his successors—can bargain the Soviets and ultimately others into an enforceable, accountable reduction of nuclear arms and their overall threat—well, wonderful. But to have given up a major element of U.S. deterrent capacity for a symbolic reduction of weapons would have been an error of global proportion.

It is SDI itself that emerges from the Iceland experience strengthened in importance and in international credibility. Members of Congress who are tempted to undercut Reagan should take that lesson most seriously.

. . . AGAINST FLASHIER FOOTWORK

At the most superficial level, Gorbachev went into a no-lose situation. The non-summit summit was his idea. Without any of the customary preparatory lower-level negotiation, he and Reagan would face each other and history. If they managed something that looked good, both sides would gain—but as the initiator, Gorbachev would gain more than Reagan. If everything broke down, the U.S. would be blamed for not "responding."

And so it went.

Lots of people, many Americans, are blaming Reagan for the "failure." Yet it was Gorbachev who asked for it, set its agenda, drew one line in the dirt and told Reagan to come across it or go home.

Reagan went home. With right on his side. If he made a mistake, it was accepting Gorbachev's invitation in the first place. In putting unrealistic faith behind the hope for an acceptable, balanced, responsible reduction of nuclear weapons and perhaps more accords.

There will be other opportunities. Reagan's got two years more to fashion history. Gorbachev's got to play for the long run, and he has pressures from all sides—especially from domestic economic disarray and poverty. The lesson for the U.S. is one of the importance of both preparation and control.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I reserve the time of the distinguished minority leader.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 11 a.m., with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, first, I would like to congratulate the Acting President pro tempore on his excellent appearance on television yesterday. He did a fine job.

WHY THE ICELAND SUMMIT COULD ONLY FAIL

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, many Americans may have the impression that the two superpowers came within an eyelash of a genuine arms control achievement in Iceland over the weekend. President Reagan called the tentative agreement that got away the most sweeping and generous arms control agreement in history. A leading Democractic critic of the President called it a tragedy that the two armed-to-the-teeth superpowers came so close to an agreement and then failed. This Senator sees it entirely differently. Both Secretary Gorbachev and President Reagan were wrong. And so was the Democratic critic who complained that this country's intransigence over the strategic defense initiative killed a great potential arms control advance.

Let us suppose Secretary Gorbachev had ignored the alleged "threat" of star wars and had bought the whole package. Would this have stopped the arms race? Would it represent a significant step toward the nonnuclear world that Secretary Gorbachev and President Reagan talk about? No way. Let us be specific. The tentative agreement had three major parts. First, the virtual elimination of so-called medium nuclear warheads of either superpower in Europe. The Soviets would retire these SS-20's and SS-4's with their roughly 1,400 warheads to Asiatic Russia. The United States would bring its European based Pershing and Cruise missiles home to the United States. What effect would this have had? European countries would be spared the embarrassment of permitting foreign-owned and operated nuclear weapons on their soil. But that is it. European cities would be just as vulnerable to the massive Soviet strategic arsenal as they are now. Soviet cities would be vulnerable to nuclear weapons based in the United States or in American submarines or bombers. They would also be vulnerable to the considerable and growing nuclear arsenals of the United Kingdom and France.

The second major part of the tentative agreement was a vague pledge to reduce nuclear testing. It was phrased as "starting with verification of existing treaties and working toward an ultimate reduction of tests." Obviously, the significance of this agreement depends on how deep a reduction of tests and how soon the timetable would begin. At best it might be a 50-percent reduction in the number of tests since it was expected to dovetail with the proposed reduction in strategic nuclear warheads. Would such a reduction have any real significance? Answer: very little. Each side would be able to select their highest priority and most promising new nuclear weapon developments for testing. The technological nuclear arms race would still speed ahead. The pace would be a little slower, but not much.

Finally, how about the third part of the agreement, the big enchilada, the reported agreement by both sides to "a 50-percent cut in bombers and missile warheads and in the number of missile launchers." If this means a global cut on both sides of 50 percent of their strategic arsenal, and that is certainly the most generous interpretation, where would it leave the two superpowers? It would mean both arsenals would decline from about 10,000 nuclear warheads to 5,000. Now keep in mind that the American Academy of Science has found that if 100 Soviet strategic nuclear warheads—not 5,000 or 2,000 or even 1,000—but if 100 Soviet nuclear warheads struck American cities we would instantly have between 35 million and 55 million dead Americans. This country would be finished as an organized society. So what does a reduction in warheads to 5,000 mean? Virtually nothing.

In aggregate the superpowers with this three-part agreement in force would still be locked in a massive technological nuclear arms race. They would both still be armed to the nuclear teeth. Ah, but would not this reduction have begun a process? If the super nuclear powers agree to go down to 5,000 strategic warheads why can we not expect them to keep their intention avowed by President Reagan and Secretary Gorbachev to abolish all nuclear weapons on both sides? Can this agreement become the basis for the end of nuclear weapons everywhere? Mr. President, anyone who believes this is dwelling in fairyland. He is living a fantasy. He is expecting something that never was and never will be. Does any sane and sober person really believe that the Soviet Union will surrender its superpower status, ever? Regardless of the honeyed words of Mikhail Gorbachev this is nonsense. And he knows it. The Soviet nuclear arsenal is its ticket to superpower status. It is the force, the one and only force, that gives Secretary Gorbachev one of the two seats at whatever summit takes place as long as he retains power in the Soviet Union.

What is more, suppose this Senator is wrong? Suppose both sides do abolish nuclear weapons? And suppose France and China and the United Kingdom, plus Pakistan and Israel, Argentina and South Africa and the other potential nuclear powers also join in. What does that do? No. 1, it makes the world safe for a superpower conventional war. And how long would it be after such a war began before the country that felt it was losing and found its very survival was at stake would fabricate, deploy and use the ultimate nuclear weapon? Thousands of scientists living in scores of countries throughout the world know how to construct a nuclear bomb. The necessary materials are available everywhere.

Mr. President, it is time we grow up. It is time to recognize that as long as mankind dwells on this planet nuclear weapons will be a sad and grim reality, but a reality nevertheless. Arms control must recognize that we must accept that grim fact and build on it. We must use arms control to make our nuclear arsenal and that of our adversary as stable as possible so that both superpowers know that a superpower war—nuclear or conventional—can never be won, that there would be nothing but losers—total dead losers on both sides. And therefore, it must never be fought. The challenge is not to abolish nuclear weapons. It is to use this astounding nuclear power to keep the peace and prevent a general war.

THE MYTH OF THE DAY

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, my myth of the day is that tax reform and reduction legislation over the past decade has resulted in the lowering of the share of national income going to taxes. Given the recent headlines concerning the major tax reform bill now awaiting the President's signature it is easy to conclude that the tax burden has been and will continue to decline. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Between 1975 and 1986 GNP and national income in current dollars increased 150 percent. During that same period Federal taxes increased 173 percent, and State and local taxes 157 percent. In other words, the share of our national income going to pay for Government programs has increased over the past decade.

Even more frightening is the fact that because Federal spending grows much more quickly than tax receipts the Federal deficits and the national debt exploded to record levels. It took our Nation more than two centuries to reach the $1 trillion mark for the national debt. Only 5 years later, early in 1986 we achieved the dubious record of a $2 trillion national debt.

Federal income taxes are the largest single resource of revenues, but account for only 28 percent of all taxes collected at all levels of government. Close behind, at 26 percent of all taxes collected, are Federal Social Security taxes. Many low- and middle-income Americans now actually pay more in Social Security taxes than they do in income taxes. When the effects of the new income tax reform legislation are combined with the scheduled increases in Social Security taxes, a majority of Americans will fall into this category.

Tax reform is a great idea, but we will be able to lower the proportion of our incomes going for taxes only when we substantially reduce the rate of growth in government spending.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR PAUL LAXALT

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, the close of the 99th Congress this week marks the retirement from this body of Senator PAUL LAXALT of Nevada. His contributions as a Senator will be missed by all of us who have been privileged to serve with him.

PAUL LAXALT has immense strength of character and conviction. He has been diligent in working for what he believes is the right direction for this country. At the same time he has overcome partisan politics without compromising his beliefs.

Senator LAXALT is a close, personal friend of President Ronald Reagan, but he has never been one to take advantage of this position. He has, rather, chosen to work quietly and diligently in pursuit of his goals rather than seeking the limelight of national acclaim.

PAUL LAXALT has been steadfast in his loyalty to the State of Nevada. He founded the Senate's bipartisan Western Coalition which has worked consistently for the needs of States in the Western part of our country.

Senator LAXALT began his career in public service as Lieutenant Governor of Nevada from 1963–66, later serving as Governor of Nevada from 1966 to 1970. He was first elected to the U.S. Senate in 1974, serving as a member of the Senate Appropriations and Judiciary committees.

He has consistently advocated a policy of fiscal responsibility for our Nation, including immediate balancing of the Federal budget. Senator LAXALT also believes in the importance of deregulating industry and has supported the decontrol of oil in order to promote U.S. energy independence.

As the son of an immigrant sheepherder from the Basque Hill country of France, PAUL LAXALT has combined his father's independent nature and his mother's strength of will to become the outstanding Senator that he is today.

As the oldest son in a family of six and the father of seven children, Senator LAXALT is a staunch advocate for the American family. His concern for the importance of education for our children is inherent in his concern for the future of our Nation.

Senator LAXALT, I join all my colleagues in this Chamber in wishing you and your family the very best as you depart from the U.S. Senate. We thank you for the contributions you have made to your State, to our Nation, and to the U.S. Senate.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR CHARLES McC. MATHIAS

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, this year marks the final chapter in the U.S. Senate career of a man who has served as a Member of Congress through two of the most dynamic and important decades in our Nation's history. Senator CHARLES MCC. MATHIAS retires at the end of the 99th session of Congress with an outstanding record of accomplishment.

Senator MATHIAS possesses the sincerity of conviction that often forces hard choices along the way. His willingness to stand by his beliefs has distinguished CHARLES MATHIAS as a man for the people of Maryland, not the politics of Washington.

His impressive list of legislative accomplishments has not been easily won, but Senator MATHIAS is not a man to back down from an issue in which he believes. As a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee and a strong proponent of civil rights legislation in the 1960's, Senator MATHIAS carried forth a family tradition that began during the administration of Abraham Lincoln by working for racial equality.

As an adviser to the Kissinger Commission on Central America and a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Senator MATHIAS has diligently worked to formulate a cohesive policy for Central America that would be suitable to both parties, as well as the President. His unflagging efforts in undertaking this task provide testimony to his strength of character and his dedication to the Senate and to his country.

Senator MATHIAS has repeatedly spoken out in favor of arms control and the importance of enforceable arms control treaties.

His chairmanship of the Senate Rules Committee has allowed Senator MATHIAS to continue his work as a reformer of our Nation's election laws. He was a principal sponsor of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 which required the first disclosure of campaign expenditures and contributions. I have had the pleasure of working with him as we have both attempted in the 99th Congress to reform our Nation's campaign finance laws, and I compliment his cooperation as my legislation in this area moved through the Senate Rules Committee.

Senator MATHIAS has also been a leader in civil service reform, home rule for the District of Columbia, and for safe disposition of nuclear wastes.

Senator MATHIAS' main concern throughout the years, however, has been in serving the needs of his home State. From the environment to municipal reform, Senator MATHIAS has served as an inspirational leader in the growth of the State of Maryland.

A native of Frederick, MD, Senator MATHIAS first began his years of public service as an assistant attorney general for the State of Maryland in 1953, later serving Frederick as city attorney from 1954–59. He served in the Maryland House of Delegates in 1959–60 and won election to the U.S. House of Representatives from the Sixth District of Maryland in 1960, serving four terms in that body before being elected to the U.S. Senate in 1969. He also served our country in the U.S. Navy from 1942–46.

Senator MATHIAS, I join with my other colleagues in this body in wishing you and your family the very best as you leave the U.S. Senate. Thank you for your public service to your community, your State, and to your country throughout the years.

SENATOR PAUL LAXALT

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, in a few days several Senators will be leaving the Senate. I know that one Senator, PAUL LAXALT, will be missed sorely by myself and others in the months and years ahead.

I have had the pleasure of working with Senator LAXALT on many issues in his years of Senate service. Without exception, he has been willing to work together on these matters, and his knowledge and expertise always have been invaluable, particulary in his service on the Appropriations Committee. As chairman of the Subcommittee on Criminal Law, PAUL LAXALT was most eager to help me in my efforts to initiate some severely needed reforms in our Nation's prison system.

In all of his endeavors, PAUL LAXALT distinguished himself as a gentleman, statesman, and as an individual aware of institutional considerations. At a time when the Senate, as an institution, is struggling in near paralysis, Senator LAXALT fought to hold things together. He cared about tradition and the responsibilities of senior Senators, and he served the State of Nevada and the country well.

One of PAUL's most important achievements was his role earlier this year as President Reagan's personal ambassador during the Philippine revolution. It is widely known that Senator LAXALT's diplomatic skills were one of the most important factors in avoiding large scale bloodshed during that crisis. I am certain that the President took great comfort in knowing that he could rely on PAUL during this particularly distressing time.

While I look forward to the convening of the next Congress, I know that Senator LAXALT's absence will be a void that will not be filled easily. I am pleased that I had the opportunity to serve with PAUL LAXALT in the Senate and wish him well.

RETIRING SENATORS

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I want to join in paying tribute to distinguished colleagues who are voluntarily retiring from the Senator at the end of this Congress. We shall miss their wise counsel and good fellowship.

My comments are necessarily brief, but my respect and friendship for these colleagues are deep-seated and longstanding. Though they differ in personality and philosophy, each has been a truly distinguished Senator, each a valued colleague.

RUSSELL LONG, my chairman and my friend, exemplifies the highest traditions of public service. He brought his keen intellect and ready wit to the complexities of tax policy. We have all learned much from him; we respect this skill; and we shall regret his absence time and again in the years ahead. My admiration is exceeded only by my affection for him.

TOM EAGLETON approaches public service with the same qualities that he approaches life: passion, courage, intelligence, and good humor. When he fights for a cause, his very forcefulness recruits allies. When he pokes fun at something, as he often does, his laughter is contagious.

MAC MATHIAS has been a steady voice of reason, sometimes a lonely voice against the passions and pressures of the moment. A man of dignity and principle, he has brought a national and even international perspective to the responsibility we all have of representing our States.

BARRY GOLDWATER is a historical figure to our Nation and a warm, earthy human being to those of us who serve with him. His interests and life experiences are as varied as the geological layers in the Grand Canyon. But throughout his long life of public service, he has remained a patriot, a man of conscience and principle and candor.

Mr. President, these Senators can each be proud of their service in this body and of their individual records of accomplishment. They have freely chosen to leave this body, to turn their lives to different pursuits. If they have some regrets at leaving, those are nothing compared with our regret at their departure. And I am sure we all have at least a twinge of envy of the less hectic life they now can lead.

We honor them as colleagues. We shall miss them as friends.

RECOGNITION OF STAFF OF THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON IMPEACHMENT

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, the Senate recently completed an extraordinary proceeding, carried out by an unprecedented method. The proceeding, of course, was the impeachment trial of Harry E. Claiborne. For the first time in half a century, the Senate was called upon to decide whether or not to remove a Federal judge from the bench. A key element of the process of making the decision was the establishment, for the first time in the history of the Senate, of a special committee to receive the evidence relevant to the impeachment trial. The role of the Senate Impeachment Trial Committee established by Senate Resolution 481 has been the subject of a great deal of debate during the Senate's consideration of the Claiborne impeachment. That debate will no doubt continue, particularly when the Senate is next called upon to try an impeachment and looks to the Claiborne precedent. As chairman of this special committee, I speak now, not to enter that debate, but simply to offer my thanks to the many people whose conscientious work and thoughtful counsel enabled the special committee to discharge the duty assigned to it by the Senate.

Of course, the 11 Senators who served with me on the committee deserve recognition. Each of them took this unusual assignment seriously; each one made an important contribution to the committee's work. I know that the vice chairman of the committee, Senator SARBANES, joins me in thanking them for their efforts and for their consistent attendance.

But every member of the impeachment committee would acknowledge that we could not have performed our assignment without the hard work of the committee's staff. When the committee was established, no special provision was made for staff support. It was thus necessary to seek staff from other assignments. Thus, every member of the special committee's staff was called upon to perform double duty, a burden made even heavier by the fact that the committee's busiest period coincided with the hectic concluding weeks of the 99th Congress.

The committee could not possibly have carried out its responsibilities without the advice and assistance of Michael Davidson, the Senate Legal Counsel. Mike's daily responsibilities are quite daunting by themselves. He and his small staff are the Senate's lawyers, responsible for representing this Chamber's interests in a burgeoning docket of actual and threatened litigation before the Federal courts. In the closing hours of the impeachment proceeding, Mike played his accustomed role, defending the Senate against an application by Judge Claiborne for a temporary restraining order enjoining a vote on the Articles of Impeachment.

But much earlier in the process, even before the establishment of the special committee, Mike Davidson had put his incisive legal mind to the task of advising the Senate on its discharge of this constitutional duty. After he was appointed as counsel to the special committee, he devoted long hours to framing the legal issues presented, advising the chairman on evidentiary and other rulings, and maintaining cordial and effective lines of communication with all parties. His skill and judgment were invaluable resources of which the committee frequently availed itself as it sought to navigate through the uncharted waters of this unprecedented proceeding. When the matter moved to the full Senate for the trial phase, Mike Davidson was on hand to advise the Presiding Officer. He acquitted himself throughout with distinction, and the entire Senate owes him its thanks.

To the staff of the Committee on Rules and Administration fell the task of making all the logistical arrangements necessary for the committee to do its job. Under the direction of John Childers, staff director of the special committee, staffers prepared the venues for the committee meetings and hearings and the Senate trial; docketed and distributed mountains of pleadings, memorandums, and other documents; cataloged exhibits; maintained security; informed the press; and took care of a myriad of other essential details. In addition, Anthony L. Harvey, the committee's chief clerk, worked with Parliamentarian Emeritus Floyd M. Riddick, a pro bono consultant to the committee, on a compilation of the relevant Senate rules and precedents; and, with his assistant, Byron Hoover, coordinated with W.A. Dowless and with Joseph P. Patterson of the Government Printing Office the speedy preparation of four volumes of transcript and other materials for the use of the Senate. John Rixey, the deputy staff director; Gerald Gereau, the security coordinator; and Ann Pincus and Randy Dove, press officers, also made valuable contributions, as did Carole Blessington, Kimberley Autin, and Gail Martin of the Rules Committee staff.

Finally, each member of the committee designated staffers to assist in preparing for the hearings and analyzing the testimony received. I ask unanimous consent that a list of the Members' staff representatives be printed in the RECORD as this point.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMBERS' STAFF REPRESENTATIVES

Senator Mathias, Chairman, Steve Metalitz, Matthew Gerson, and Eileen Mayer.
Senator Hatch, Randall Rader, Michael Chadwick, and Dee Benson.
Senator Warner, Jean Barrett.
Senator Rudman, Paul Barbadoro, and Wilson Abney.
Senator Pressler, Bob Samors.
Senator McConnell, Bill Short, and Larry Harman.
Senator Sarbanes, Vice Chairman, Marty Gruenberg, and Marvin Moss.
Senator Heflin, Karen Kremer, and Tom Young.
Senator DeConcini, Bob Feidler and Doug Drury.
Senator Pryor, David Smith and Jeff Trinca.
Senator Gore, Goody Marshall and Peter Sage Knight.
Senator Bingaman, Faith Roessel and Edwin Jayne.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, all of these men and women contributed to the work of the Senate Impeachment Trial Committee on the impeachment of Harry E. Claiborne. Their competent work, under stringent time pressures, enabled the committee to carry out the difficult and unprecedented task assigned to it by the Senate. I know that every member of the committee joins me in thanking them for their dedication to this task.

COMMISSION ON MERCHANT MARINE AND DEFENSE

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, last week, the President signed legislation that represented the final step in the creation of the Commission on Merchant Marine and Defense. The idea for this Commission was conceived by Representative CHARLIE BENNETT of Florida, the distinguished chairman of the House Seapower Subcommittee, and was supported by both the House of Representatives and the Senate. The Commission has as its function to assess the defense-related aspects of the U.S. maritime industries and to report to Congress its findings and recommendations. Although the establishment of the Commission was originally approved by the Congress several years ago, we have had to approve several other measures since then to clarify the authority for expenditure of funds for the Commission as well as the status of the Commissioners themselves.

Now that these matters have been resolved, the Commission will finally be able to begin its work. Last week, the President forwarded to the Senate the names of those individuals nominated to be Commissioners. In addition to the Secretary of the Navy and the Administrator of the Maritime Administration, who will cochair the Commission, those nominated to serve are: Adm. Jim Holloway, USN (retired), former Chief of Naval Operations and now president of the Council of American-Flag Ship Operators; Shannon Wall, president of the National Maritime Union; William E. Haggett, chairman and CEO of Bath Iron Works; Joe Sewall, president of the board of trustees of the Maine Maritime Academy; and Ed Carlson, chairman and CEO of United Airlines.

Mr. President, I am very pleased that two outstanding citizens from the State of Maine are among this group. Joe Sewall has been a distinguished political and business figure in the State of Maine for many years, having served as president of the Maine Senate and now as head of his own engineering company. He currently serves as chairman of the board of trustees of the Maine State Maritime Academy and thus can make an invaluable contribution to the efforts of the Commission. Bill Haggett, as chairman and CEO of the largest private employer in my State, has been a very effective spokesman for the business community with the Maine State Legislature and local governments. Bath Iron Works is recognized as a leader in the technological advancement of the U.S. shipbuilding industry, and Bill Haggett brings a unique and valuable perspective to the Commission's work. I have had the pleasure of meeting and working with other nominees for the Commission and I believe these are some of the best minds available for the task of the Commission.

The importance of the U.S. shipbuilding and maritime industries to our national security is unquestioned. Our shipyards—labor and management alike—have risen to the challenge to build the 600-ship Navy at the most competitive prices possible. They have demonstrated that efficiency, productivity and pride are more than ever a part of America's shipbuilding industry. Ship operators and seagoing personnel have also risen to the task of providing more efficient U.S.-flag shipping in support of our economy and our Nation's defense.

The 1980's, however, have seen a decline in all segments of the maritime industry. Increasing pressure from foreign competition that is Government-subsidized to varying degrees and continued pressure on our national budget have rendered impractical some of the maritime policies of the past. It is, therefore, essential that the Commission begin immediately to assess the defense requirements of the maritime industry and the capability of the industry to meet these requirements.

Mr. President, I hope that the Senate Armed Services Committee, on which I serve, will move immediately to approve these nominees, and that the full Senate will also give its approval as quickly as possible. I pledge my full support to the Commission as it proceeds with its task, and I look forward to receiving its input as we work together to resolve this important national security issue.

THE MEETING IN ICELAND

Mr. WILSON. Madam President, the President and the United States team that accompanied him are now back from Iceland. The air is filled with cries of, "Oh, what might have been." There are any number of doom brokers saying that we have lost the opportunity of a century.

To the contrary, what the President of the United States has proved, once again, is the value of firmness and patience. What really happened in Iceland, I think, is well described by Dr. Brzezinski, President Carter's former National Security Adviser, when he said that we went in response to an invitation for an allegedly informal meeting and, of course, when we arrived, found that the Soviets were tabling a series of proposals, and that they then made an offer which we could not in wisdom and in good faith accept.

Then, of course, even before the meeting was over, Viktor Karpov and others were quickly at their business of attempting to manipulate Western opinion and blaming the President of the United States for having cast away an opportunity.

The fact is that they came intending to set up an impossible choice: either we would give away SDI, which would have the practical effect of relegating it to laboratory-only research, or they would blame us for not going forward with serious arms control. This is an old game of the Soviets; it is not a new one. But for those who seem to think it new, for those who are now raising the cry that, having failed in their tactic, the Soviets will forever eschew the arms control process, let me suggest that they once again are making the error ascribed to so many by Santayana. They need to consult history, and very recent history. They need look back only to 1984 to find that, once again, the Soviets, after laying down a condition, much as they did in Iceland, stomped out of negotiations, vowing never to return unless the United States agreed not to go forward with deployment of U.S. GLCM and Pershing II missiles capable of reaching the Soviet Union from their European bases.

Of course, we know that the President and our allies did go forward with that deployment, despite the outrageous campaign of Soviet propaganda, intimidation, and even ham-handed interference in European elections, just as the President has again, in Iceland, had the wisdom and the courage, calmly but resolutely, to reject Soviet pressure tactics and Soviet demands and to insist on going forward with deployment of the strategic defense initiative.

He should have done so, Madam President, because even as we work toward those reductions which he proposed, it will be necessary to hedge with a safeguard against cheating, against accidental launch, and against attack by a third party, perhaps a Qadhafi, capable of delivering a ballistic missile to the United States or to some other unsuspecting part of the world.

What we need to understand is that, as it matures, the strategic defense initiative will provide the United States with ever-increasing leverage in negotiations with the Soviets. I do not think we have seen the last of them in Geneva or at the bargaining tables elsewhere. It will provide leverage even beyond that, which it has clearly provided already, as both our own capability increases and as the Soviet appreciation of it increases, in no small measure from their own longstanding and vigorous activity in ABM defenses, which we seem dangerously to have lost sight of.

What the episode in Iceland really proves is the absolute necessity for U.S. firmness and patience of the kind that Ronald Reagan's leadership provided in great abundance. We do not achieve real arms control breakthroughs overnight. We achieve them at Geneva through detailed negotiations, but only when the policymaker at the top has decided that we will not be rushed, that we will not listen to the strident cries from friend or foe, demanding that he yield to every importuning, to the temptation to secure a place in history as the bringer of peace.

The President was firm, clear, and patient. He made good-faith efforts to bring about real arms control. The Soviets have rejected these, but I think they will be back at the table. In the meantime, not only the people of America but also the people of the free world—certainly, the people in this Congress—need to rally support and unite in thanks to him for his leadership and for providing that example of clear vision, of courage, of firmness and patience, without which we will not achieve the kind of arms reduction and the kind of safety which the world needs and which we can bring to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business?

Mr. MELCHER. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MELCHER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Is the Senator from Montana desiring to speak in morning business?

Mr. MELCHER. Yes, Madam President, I desire to speak in morning business.

THE ECONOMY

Mr. MELCHER. Madam President, the situation that Americans face here at home is pretty grim for a lot of them. They want some attention paid to the economy of this country.

Reykjavik is history now. The evaluations are proper but those evaluations must be in perspective and in proportion to the times. The country's economic times are not good and, therefore, both President Reagan and Congress must come down to Earth.

Whether one calls it star wars or strategic defense initiative, the people hold on to their pocket book and remind us here in Congress and also they remind the administration, if anyone listens to them that it is a pretty slim pocketbook they hold and they are not about to write a blank check.

Rather, the people are practical. They have some major concerns about the American economy and they want an accounting. What is happening to America's farmers and ranchers and to the basic industries in this country, such as agriculture, energy mining, forest products? Why should we permit, they query, foreign trade to leave America and Americans last, with Japan, Europe, and other trading partners coming out first? I do not think Americans have got over the notion of that slogan, "America First."

In the case of trade policy, that is an oversimplification and the people know it. We know we have to have reciprocal agreements with our trading partners. What they are really asking is, what is going on here? How come this trade imbalance, this red ink in world trade, is a $170 billion imbalance this year?

You know there is a broad array of imports and exports that make up that $170 billion in red ink. And what it means to Americans is how does it affect them, what has it done to their livelihoods? Has it wiped out a job for them or made their time and pay on the job less?

And, of course, I believe the American farmers understand that part of the reason they are hurting so much is because of the trade imbalance. It is very discouraging to them, as well it should be to all Americans, to see agricultural exports dwindle since 1981 from some $40 billion in trade surplus—selling more agricultural commodities than what we imported in this country—5 years ago it was some $40 billion in agriculture surplus leaving this country. It is very sad to see that dwindle down to last year's $31 billion and what looks like will be $25 billion this year. In the past few months, we even imported more agricultural goods than we exported.

Well, while we want to change that, we say we do here in the Congress, the administration also says they want to change that and gives reason to believe it is going to change it, the truth of the matter is we are not doing very much about it.

A few days ago here in the Senate on the continuing resolution, that massive appropriation bill, we attached an amendment that I offered that is just a very modest step to show that we want, not only want to reverse it, we just gave the direction to the Department of Agriculture and the Department of State: "Here is what you should do in the next few months to start that reversal."

There was an editorial in last Friday's Washington Post dealing with the amendment which now sits in the conference committee between the conferees representing the Senate and those conferees representing the House, and its fate there is unknown. But I call attention to this editorial. I think it is a well-balanced editorial by the Post editorial writers because it gives both sides. It gives the administration's objections to the amendment and then it points out some of the pluses of it.

I would like to very briefly refer to the administration's objections. Here they are: The administration says that since the amendment deals with providing the opportunity for some of our surplus commodities to go to some countries abroad, friendly countries abroad, that it would, one, further depress world agricultural markets and cost United States and other farmers badly needed sales.

I would like to rebut that, Madam President, by simply stating that nothing, nothing at all can succeed in driving commodity prices lower than having huge commodity surpluses sitting in our bins or on the ground in some cases—stored, mind you, in bins or elevators or on the ground—nothing can further depress quicker the price of those commodities than to have those huge mounting surpluses just sitting there. That is price depressing of those commodities in the extreme. And the fact is that what is in commodity storage now—owned by the Federal Government, our Federal Government—is going to continue to mount and mount and mount unless we take steps to reduce those surpluses.

That, Madam President, is the principal reason for the amendment. There are other reasons, but that is No. 1—looking out after us, taking America's point of view first, reducing the surpluses so we can have some stock, some leveling out of the continual decline of commodity prices.

Second, the Post reported in this editorial as an objection of the administration that the amendment—that is disposal of the surpluses—would undercut and discourage food production in receiving countries thereby keeping them dependent.

The amendment provides that the country, to receive the commodity, must apply for it. It is that simple. There is nothing strange about that. They must apply for it.

In their best judgment, they see the need for the food commodities exceeding the danger that is mentioned here. That is the only answer to that type of complaint or criticism by the administration.

Third, the third objection of the administration is that it tends to become a cumbersome substitute for cash foreign aid. Cash foreign aid? Where do we have the cash? We have heard Secretary Shultz and many others state that foreign aid will be very limited beause of our shortage of cash, because of our budget deficit. We have the food. It is in storage. The amount of food that would be moved under that amendment would reduce the Federal cost for paying for that storage by roughly $100 million.

Now that, again, goes to the point: Whose interests are we looking out for? And I have to tell you that the purpose of the amendment, while it has other purposes, first of all looks out for America's interests.

The Post goes on, in the reporting of the administration's objections, to say that even the distribution of surplus food incurs costs.

Indeed it does. That is why the amendment requires the recipient country to pay for the transportation, distribution, and processing costs. That is looking out for our interests.

The other purpose of the amendment is simply this: There are a great number of people in these countries named and in other countries around the world that today are hungry, that today are malnourished, that today really do not have the vim and the vigor to start the economic recovery in their own countries that is so vital.

In addition, there can be no economic recovery for a country that is depressed from lack of food until there is a sufficient supply of food. So the amendment has our interests, and the recipient countries' interests. And, might I say, Mr. President, that the food surplus that we have in such abundance need not be treated as a stepchild but should be used as an asset. But sitting idle in Federal storage does not make it a productive asset.

The amendment that I presented, is now approved by the Senate, and now sitting in conference committee is only a first step. But it is an important step.

Of all the things that we can do to make our economic plight worse in the United States, the No. 1 thing that will make it worse is to do nothing, just to sit idly by, and just to refuse to do something. In agricultural exports this amendment is proper, and it is vitally needed primarily because the administration is not doing anything.

We passed an amendment as part of another bill, and it went down to the White House. It would require that we subsidize grain sales to the Soviet Union. It was limited in time to September 30 which is well past. That move was undertaken, and the offer was made to the Soviets to discount the price of American surplus grain commodities. They did not take it up as could have been easily predicted since they would prefer to purchase from other countries first rather than purchase from us. The supplies of other countries in grain commodities is still more than they need. They have surpluses also.

But we sat idly by here in the United States refusing to participate in some of the programs that were called for in the farm bill that was passed in 1985. Either the State Department or the Department of Agriculture, one or the other, can find some reason not to move on a variety of those export expansion programs of America's surplus commodities.

We have a responsibility in this Congress when the executive branch refuses to do the practical—to take the commonsense approach to agricultural surplus commodities—to do something ourselves. I hope my colleagues here in the Senate will continue to believe, as we believed a few days ago when we passed this amendment, that it is a vital step necessary now before we adjourn.

If we adjourn this Congress without bringing about a reversal of the agricultural export policy of this administration, we will indeed be falling down on the duty and obligation we have to the people of this country. All of agriculture, including agribusiness, believes it is necessary to move a portion of these surplus commodities through the various types of programs that we have: Food for Peace, all the various amendments, and the 1985 export enhancement sections of the farm bill. These are all essential and should be utilized if we are truly going to do the right thing for the people of this country, and particularly those in the agricultural sector.

COCAINE USE CONTINUES TO CLIMB

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I wish to report to our colleagues that the use of cocaine is down in our society. Much to my regret, I cannot do that. On the contrary, cocaine use in the United States is up. The number of coke users climbed to 5,800,000 last year, compared with 4,200,000 in 1982. This is frightening. It is a one-fourth increase in the number of cocaine consumers over a 4-year period.

The figures are contained in the National Household Survey on Drug Abuse released by the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration, one of the lead Federal agencies concerned with the drug problem. The Administrator of that agency is Dr. Ian MacDonald of St. Petersburg, FL. I visited with him and he said the main reason for the rise in cocaine popularity is new forms of the drug can be found. Cocaine normally is a powder and is snorted by its users. But it can be processed into freebase and crack, which is smoked. Younger people, it seems, are attracted to the smokeable forms.

The survey discloses that 44 percent of American youth between the ages of 12 and 17 have used cocaine and have freebased cocaine. At the same time, the survey showed that the dangers of cocaine use are widely recognized; 92 percent of the people questioned said they regarded cocaine as a great risk.

There was some good news in the Adam-Ha study. The use of marijuana, LSD and PCP is down markedly. The number of marijuana users dropped nearly 2 million between 1982 and 1985. This is very encouraging.

Once again, the status of marijuana as a "gateway drug" is confirmed. Cocaine users most always start their drug careers with marijuana. This survey revealed that many people use both marijuana and cocaine, and it showed that marijuana users are 12 times more likely to be cocaine users than those who do not use marijuana at all.

Statistics found in the national survey are enough to make one worry about whether we are moving toward a drug culture. For example, 36.8 million Americans—19 percent of our population over 12—have tried marijuana, cocaine, or other illegal drugs at least once in the past year. Think about that: Nearly 20 percent of all American teenagers, young people and adults, used some illegal drug in 1985.

Mr. President, the disturbing news that cocaine use is on the increase is bound to have other ramifications. Fatalities from cocaine have quadrupled since 1980. Admissions to emergency rooms that are cocaine related have climbed more than 300 percent in the past 5 years. It is a safe assumption that there will be even more deaths, accidents, and hospital incidents attributable to the drug.

Tests after tests have shown that cocaine is the most addictive drug known to man. The addiction potential was amply demonstrated in one test which showed that laboratory animals are willing to forgo food and water to obtain cocaine, even to the point of death. We are dealing with a powerful destructive force. I sincerely hope that the educational and rehabilitation programs that stem from our new drug bill will turn the tide against cocaine.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quroum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, it is still my hope that we can take care of all the nominations on the calendar today. I am going to propose a unanimous-consent request later that would, in effect, wipe the slate clean. I have given a copy of that to Senator BYRD's staff and hopefully during the policy luncheon the Democrats would have an opportunity to look at it and I will run it by Republicans during our policy luncheon, which is in progress.

THE ICELAND SUMMIT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me indicate that we have had a very good bipartisan meeting this morning with the President concerning what happend in Reykjavik, Iceland, over the weekend. I think there is some confusion, but I believe it was the consensus, and I will let others speak for themselves—the Speaker was there; the distinguished minority leader was there; Congressman MICHEL, the Republican leader in the House was there; a number of Republicans and Democrats—I believe the consensus was that considerable progress was made in Iceland and that we all hope that it will continue. The President said the door is open. Contrary to some earlier reports which indicated the talks would collapse, we had failure in Iceland and the door had been slammed, that does not seem to be the case at all.

So there have been agreements in a number of areas that the President outlined this morning. One sticking point is with reference to SDI. And the President outlined his reasons for not surrendering that because of his concern for the American people, because of the need for some leverage to encourage the Russians to in fact destroy intermediate range missiles and intercontinental missiles after the agreement is signed, and to protect us from some third country who might have capabilities 10 years from now. So it is an insurance policy as far as the President is concerned.

But I would suggest now that the meeting with the President and Mr. Gorbachev was successful. It was not a lost opportunity nor is it the last opportunity. It is the hope I think of everyone who was there this morning—and I know it is the hope of the President—that we can continue down the road for progress, and that we will reach an arms agreement that will eliminate all nuclear weapons.

That is the hope of the President. That is the offer he made to the Secretay General, Mr. Gorbachev. And I know there is a press conference at 2 o'clock Washington time by Mr. Gorbachev. I know that the Soviets will be listening to those who left the meeting at the White House, Republicans and Democrats, to determine whether or not there is unity among all of us in support of the President's position. Even though some may disagree on the value of SDI I do believe that everyone who left the meeting—the President was applauded when he came in. I did not detect any partisan criticism during the questioning nor did I after the meeting. I do not believe there will be any when Members of the House and Members of the Senate address the public and the news media.

I also understand there is an SDI proposal, and that there is a two-page summary of it in the report authored by the Presiding Officers, Senator COHEN, and Senator NUNN. That has been called to our attention.

So, Mr. President, I believe we have made progress.

RECESS UNTIL 2:15 P.M.

Mr. DOLE. I know the distinguished Senator from Minnesota will be happy to hear me make the unanimous-consent request that we now stand in recess until the hour of 2:15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Thereupon, at 1:02 p.m., the Senate recessed until 2:14 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. CHAFEE).

STAR WARS AND THE ARMS TALKS

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I think all Americans are disappointed and distressed at the collapse of the arms talks in Iceland over the weekend. I know that is the feeling of this Senator. I think it was a serious mistake to let star wars destroy the chance for real arms control now.

The overwhelming majority of U.S. scientists tell us that the star wars system is unworkable, that it is dangerous, and it is a trillion-dollar waste of money if we go ahead with it. And so there is enormous reluctance about star wars here in the Congress and throughout the citizenry of the United States, and I think it is true on a bipartisan basis. Yet that issue is the one which caused these arms discussions over the weekend to collapse.

Now, we have serious financial problems in this country. We see it with a Federal budget deficit; we see it with a balance-of-payments deficit; we also have serious sectorial problems; we have oil and gas problems down in the area of the Senator from Louisiana; we have problems in the manufacturing base; we have problems in the savings and loan and banking industries that we are reading about more and more all the time; we have grave problems in the agricultural sector.

I do not think this country can afford an expensive new surge in the arms race, especially when it is not going to make us any safer. To commit ourselves to a course of action with star wars that could cause us to spend an additional trillion dollars on defense—and perhaps even more than that—is something that I think would bring additional strain to our financial condition and put us in a position of even greater financial jeopardy.

As a member of the Senate Banking Committee and Budget Committee and Commerce Committee, I have the opportunity to talk with a number of the top financial people in the country, because they come in to discuss the economic conditions facing the United States. The one hope that they have expressed to me over and over again is that there would be a breakthrough in the arms race that could start to lower the level of defense spending so that we could start to reduce the Federal deficits and get our financial house in order.

That has been one of the great hopes that has preceded the meetings over the weekend in Iceland. And then, when it looked as if we might get a breakthrough on arms control, there was a moment of great hope and expectation and a feeling that perhaps we were on the verge of changing direction, getting the arms race under control, a slowing down of the massive expenditure of money that is being directed off into the development of nuclear weapons and other strategic weapons. Then the news came that the talks had collapsed and that the opportunity had gotten away from us, and with the clear impression that we now stand on the verge of an acceleration in the arms race; that we are going to move ahead or we are going to be given the recommendation and the strong urging by the administration to provide unlimited funding for the star wars program in the future. Of course, we know that if we start down that road, the Soviets likewise will be prepared to spend whatever they have to spend, and then we will have to match their spending, just as they match our spending, and we can both spend ourselves into a status where we are in terrible financial and economic difficulty.

Frankly, the United States is there now. We do not have any extra money to waste on things that are not going to make us safer. That is why arms control agreements, if they can be achieved, make great sense in reducing the risk and possibility of nuclear war and easing the tremendous financial pressure on our Government at the present time.

We have just finished this fiscal year, at the end of September, and the final numbers are not in; but it appears that the Federal budget deficit will be about $230 billion. It was only supposed to be $172 billion under Gramm-Rudman, but we are coming in nearly $60 billion over that total.

So those immediate operating results, in terms of the continued growth of the Federal deficit, tell us that there is every reason for us to press for some sort of safe, intelligent, rational, and balanced arms control agreement. So I do not think we can afford to let this opportunity slip away.

I also am concerned about the fact that the military-industrial complex in this country will always have expensive new systems for us to buy. President Eisenhower—and former General Eisenhower—probably understood that problem as well as anybody in our history. When he left public service, his farewell comments to the American people were to warn us about the consequences and the dangers of the military-industrial complex; that, in fact, we had to exercise great care that we not just go forward with every single idea that comes out of that sector of our economy, to continue to pile up arms in many cases that we do not need and cannot use and ultimately cannot afford.

I think Ike was right, and I think the star wars plan as has been put forward is a perfect illustration of what he was warning about. That is why I say the overwhelming majority of scientists across the United States have come forward to oppose the star wars program, because it does not make sense. They do not view it as workable. They view it as destabilizing, and therefore even more dangerous with respect to the arms race in the future.

Finally, they talk about its horrendous expense—at least $1 trillion. Some estimates go as high as $2 trillion, if we were to go forward over the next decade or two and put this whole system up there in outer space. I hope we would not do that and that the administration would reconsider its thinking on this issue.

It seems to me that it would be well for us not to let the arms talks collapse at the point at which they ended in Iceland but, instead, to see if we can continue these discussions in a serious way, to leave these issues open and to have the negotiators continue to see if a way can be found to achieve agreement. I hope our Government would reassess its thinking with respect to star wars. The administration, I think, is not on sound ground in this area, and, as I say, the bulk of scientific opinion supports that view.

We had a situation the other day in the Senate on South African sanctions. One might say, "What do South African sanctions and the President's veto and the veto override have to do with what we are now seeing with respect to star wars causing the arms talks to collapse?" I think there is a parallel; and in the case of the South African sanctions, the administration had a blind spot. They were not able to see clearly what was happening in South Africa and to respond to it in a forceful and appropriate manner. As a result, Congress, on both sides of the aisle—Democrats and Republicans alike—joined, in the House and in the Senate, to override the President's veto on South African sanctions, because they saw the administration as having taken the wrong position and that Congress, in its judgment, and supported by the American people, felt that it was essential that we take an appropriate step to try to bring a change with respect to what is happening today in South Africa, with reference to apartheid.

I think the parallel is this: I think the administration is painting itself into a corner on the star wars issue. It is not something that the American people think makes sense. I believe there is great skepticism about it in the countryside, and there certainly is in Congress, on both sides of the aisle.

So let us not let the whole future hinge on this one issue. If we can have meaningful arms control that can reduce the risk of nuclear war and enable us to start to spend less money on defense, so the taxpayers can have some relief and so that those resources can be used for other, more constructive purposes—cancer research, education, senior citizens, highways, housing, or whatever—we should do so. Those are constructive purposes for which that $1 trillion of star wars money can be put to work. That is where it ought to go.

So I hope the administration would reconsider its view and not go off in a direction that is contrary to what common sense tells us and which Congress and the American people together feel is an unsound and unwise course.

If we can bring the arms race under control and bring down defense spending, we can relieve our financial pressures as a nation, and I think we can have a real economic surge. On the other hand, if the effort to make a breakthrough on the arms race fails and stalls at this point, what we are going to see is an acceleration of the arms race; we are going to see more money being spent, money we do not have, money that we have to go into debt to provide, money we have to borrow from foreigners.

We are now the No. 1 debtor nation in the world, and we are going deeper into international debt, at the rate of a billion dollars every 2½ days. Should we go out and borrow another trillion dollars from foreigners in order to invest in star wars? I think not. We cannot afford that kind of arms race into the future, and I do not think the Russians can, either. I think it is bad for us and bad for them.

Frankly, I think that some of the nations today that have the big trade surpluses with the United States—some, our traditional allies—probably feel that as long as we spend all these billions and trillions of dollars on national defense, presumably for ourselves and for them, and they do not have to make those expenditures, they are free to do exactly what they are doing, and that is to take our best jobs in this country, run up huge trade surpluses with the United States, to become stronger economically as we become weaker economically, so that we end up with the fiction that we have massive power with this enormous nuclear arsenal; but, at the same time, because we have weakened ourselves financially, we are in a situation where we are not strong at all.

The other day, the Wall Street Journal published a special supplement on the largest businesses in the world today, the top 100. I was struck by the fact that of the first 13 largest and most successful businesses in the world today, private companies, 7 are Japanese, only 5 are American, and 1 is—well, that is Royal Dutch Petroleum, another foreign company.

To me, it is a stark measure of how our economic fortunes have changed within the context of the world economy. One of the reasons is that we are draining ourselves dry with excessive defense spending. Every time the weapons manufacturers in this country walk through the door with a new scheme—now it is star wars—only $1 trillion, maybe $2 trillion, we say, "Let's go ahead with it." I think the time has come when we have to say no to that.

So we have to do a better job of managing our own resources and I think we can do it. I think if we engage in discussions that lead to mutual reduction in nuclear arms verifiable, and that has to be verifiable but to let those discussions go forward, then I think we can avoid having to have an enormous new surge in defense spending which can only have the effect of weakening our economy and I think further impoverishing the American taxpayer.

I would just conclude by saying in behalf of the people that I represent in Michigan that I hope that the administration will reconsider and think about carrying these arms discussions forward, leave the issue of star wars open, leave it open, do not close the door on that issue, leave it open and let us see if we cannot find a basis——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 5 minutes have expired.

Mr. RIEGLE. I ask unanimous consent for 1 additional minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. RIEGLE. I thank the Chair and thank the majority leader.

I think that we ought to leave the door open; we ought to continue the discussions in a serious way. I would hope that the administration would adjust its thinking on star wars, not make this an all-or-nothing proposition, but let us see if we can find a position that is good for the United States, which is acceptable as well to the Soviet system and as well as to the rest of the world as a whole, because the rest of the world is held hostage to these decisions anyway. I think the basis may be there, but star wars is not the answer for us for the furture. Everything we see tells us that it is not.

So let us see if we can find a workable basis for a negotiated reduction to the arms race and let us see if we can find it now.

I am hopeful that we can, and if we can, I think there will be bipartisan support here to carry forward with that strategy.

I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

SUMMIT MEETING IN REYKJAVIK, ICELAND

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, like many Americans, I am disappointed and frustrated by the recent failure of President Reagan and Soviet General Secretary Gorbachev to reach agreements that would have dramatically reduced the threat to the American people from Soviet missiles.

The agreements framed in 2 days of talks in Reykjavik have correctly been described as "breathtaking." The two sides had agreed to eliminate medium-range missiles in Europe, cut back Soviet missiles in Asia from over 170 to about 30, and cut each side's force of strategic nuclear warheads almost in half—from current totals of 10,000 to about 6,000.

Included in this reduction would have been the most destabilizing weapons of all—the Soviet heavy missiles. An agreement further limiting the numbers and explosive power of nuclear tests and moving us closer to the goal of a Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty also appeared to be on track.

But it all came unraveled when the two leaders could not agree on how to limit strategic defenses. President Reagan was willing only to defer deployment of a star wars system for 10 years, with virtually no restraints on development and testing of antimissile systems and components in the meantime. The Soviet proposal permitted only research and development that could be conducted in the laboratory or by fixed, ground-based interceptors.

The fact that SDI was the issue which ultimately caused the collapse of the summit should surprise no one. Since his star wars speech in March 1983, protecting this multibillion-dollar program has become the President's highest priority, even if it means the end of arms control.

In Reykjavik, the President refused to consider a middle ground between the United States and Soviet positions that could have preserved the integrity of the SDI Program while allowing the dramatic reductions drawn up by the two leaders to be implemented. As a result of the summit, SDI has now assumed a symbolic importance far in excess of its technical realities and limitations. As the President's own chief of staff, Donald Regan, stated, the Soviets made virtually all of the concessions at Reykjavik on offensive forces. When the President was called upon to make concessions on SDI, he refused—and the summit fell apart.

But it will be an even greater tragedy if this temporary setback leads to further intransigence and a hardening of negotiating positions on both sides. Opponents of arms control on both sides would like nothing better than for this failure to stalemate arms talks indefinitely. This must not be permitted to occur. The administration has only itself to blame for a summit that was hastily agreed to and poorly prepared. Now it must take responsibility for getting the arms control process back on track.

To begin with, the President and his advisers should reassess their fundamental negotiating strategy and objectives.

Our primary goal is to reduce the Soviet threat. In Reykajvik, the President had the opportunity to eliminate 4,000 Soviet ballistic missile warheads, 800 strategic missiles and bombers and 1,400 medium-range missile warheads. Such reductions are a vastly cheaper and more effective way of enhancing our national security than depending on the uncertain promise of a star wars system that many scientists believe will never work.

Another key objective of the United States is to enhance stability and reduce the risk of nuclear war as we move to lower levels of nuclear warheads. Star wars is a major barrier to such progress, because the deployment of star wars at lower levels of strategic offensive forces could actually increase the incentive for preemptive Soviet attack during a crisis. This reality was the original justification for the ABM Treaty of 1972, which sharply limited defenses against ballistic missiles. As each side moves to lower and lower levels of offensive forces, we must retain confidence that our remaining retaliatory forces can still get through—and thus continue to act as a deterrent to the other side.

We must continue to probe for flexibility in the Soviet position on SDI as we reconsider our own position. General Abrahamson, the SDI's Program manager, admits that a decision on beginning engineering development of star wars is 7 to 8 years away and that deployment could not begin for several years thereafter. In agreeing to defer deployment for 10 years, the President would have given away nothing; he was simply confirming a fact apparent to those who oversee the SDI Program.

The heart of the dispute between the United States and the Soviet Union—and what caused the breakdown in Reykjavik—is over what restrictions in SDI are acceptable. The President and his advisers insisted that the Soviet proposal would have limited SDI research so drastically that the program would be "killed." Yet, the administration insisted on being permitted to develop and test laser weapons and other space-based components over the next 10 years in a way that would have nullified our obligations under the ABM Treaty.

The obvious compromise, which does not appear to have been explored in Reykjavik, is for the administration to commit itself to adhere to the ABM Treaty, which flatly bans the development and testing of space-based ABM systems or components, for a period of 5 to 10 years, while offensive reductions proceed. This commitment would still permit considerable activity both within and outside the laboratory, short of testing prohibited types of ABM components in the field. It would permit the administration to explore the promise of these technological advances.

A commitment to adhere to the ABM Treaty during the first phase of nuclear arms reductions would cost the SDI Program nothing. Most of the significant experimental work on lasers, particle beams, and electromagnetic guns, to name a few, is taking place inside laboratories in any case.

The administration acknowledged in its report to Congress earlier this year that the SDI Program and its test activities are designed to adhere to the traditional interpretation of the ABM Treaty at least through the early 1990's. Former Secretary of Defense Harold Brown has argued persuasively that SDI can be structured to adhere to this interpretation "while permitting rapid development and even preliminary testing of technology" until at least 1995.

Last February, during my meetings with General Secretary Gorbachev in Moscow, he informed me that he would be willing to "delink" an agreement on intermediate-range nuclear forces or a test ban from progress on strategic offensive and defensive forces. He has restated this commitment several times since then and has also indicated that an agreement in either area would be sufficient to bring him to Washington for another summit.

We must not lose sight of the need to resolve the central strategic issues. But while each side reevaluates its own position on strategic defense, the completion of agreements on INF and on nuclear testing could rebuild confidence and get things moving again. Whatever the future of SDI, we should not squander the breakthroughs that were achieved at Reykjavik in these other two important areas. It is not clear that the Soviets will now stand by their commitment to delink INF and nuclear testing from SDI, but these are two matters that should now have high priority at Geneva.

The failed summit must not be permitted to become the epitaph of the Reagan administration's commitment to arms control. As the posturing and propaganda of the past 3 days recedes, I hope that both sides will pick up the pieces and reassess their differences, so that the progress so nearly made in Reykjavik will be carried forward in Geneva.

We can forgive a temporary failure. But we cannot forgive a permanent impasse when there is still so much progress that can be made.

EUGENE HASENFUS DOWNING AND U.S. INVOLVEMENT

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, when resigning from his post with the State Department last week, Mr. Bernard Kalb made the plea that "faith in America's word is the pulse beat of our democracy."

As the story of the flight of Eugene Hasenfus over Nicaraguan territory continues to unravel, it is becoming apparent that the administration's word inspires little faith. In fact, the administration's effort to distance itself from Eugene Hasenfus and the C-123 cargo plane downed over Nicaragua defies credibility. It reminds this Senator of Watergate and President Nixon's ill-fated attempts of deniability of his role in that affair.

Mr. President, before beginning the fourth of this series of questions, on the Hasenfus flight, which I will continue to undertake every day that the Senate is in session, let me briefly review the facts—and the denials—that have been issued to date.

First, Hasenfus, William Cooper, and Wallace Sawyer landed at a Salvadoran airbase at Ilopango before flying with their cargo of weapons destined for the Contras inside Nicaragua.

That base, though controlled by the Salvadoran Air Force, is totally financed by the United States Government. Americans can enter Ilopango only if they have identity cards, identifying them and approved by U.S. officials.

Yet, according to administration officials, these three Americans had nothing to do with any official U.S. enterprise.

Furthermore, the Salvadoran Government—from its President Duarte to the commander of its air force—deny that Ilopango is even used to supply Contra military operations.

Second, the C-123 flown by Hasenfus, Mr. Cooper, and Mr. Sawyer, was connected to Southern Air Transport, a charter airline owned by the CIA from 1960 to 1973. In 1984, that same aircraft was used in a United States Government "sting" operation to catch Nicaraguan officials at drug smuggling.

Yet, administration officials deny ownership or any association with this airplane.

Now, recent news reports connect Max Gomez with Donald Gregg, national security adviser to Vice President GEORGE BUSH. Well, first of all, who is Max Gomez? Gomez was identified by Hasenfus as one of two Cuban-Americans who provided logistical and flight support for the C-123 downed over Nicaragua and for other Contra support missions that had been conducted previously.

Mr. Gomez, it turns out, is a veteran of the Central Intelligence Agency who had flown for the Agency's covert Air America flying service during the Vietnam war. According to news sources, Mr. Gomez worked not for the CIA, as Hasenfus asserted at last week's press conference, but that Gomez worked for the Salvadoran Air Force.

According to the Washington Post of October 11, Mr. Gregg—again, Mr. Gregg is the national security adviser to Vice President GEORGE BUSH, who in turn sits on the National Security Council—provided a recommendation that introduced Gomez to Gen. Juan Rafael Bustillo, the Chief of Staff of El Savador's Air Force. Many of the Contra supply flights, such as the Hasenfus mission, ran out of the Salvadoran Air Force's base at Ilopango. So Gregg and Gomez are thought to have known each other from the Vietnam era. Gregg, who had served for the CIA during Vietnam, was station chief in Korea during the 1970's and was on the staff of the National Security Council during the Carter administration.

That same Washington Post article connected not just Gregg but the Vice President himself with the Hasenfus operation. According to reports, Gomez reported to the Vice President on several occasions detailing his work on the Contra supply system.

So here we have two individuals, Mr. Gomez who used to work for the Central Intelligence Agency, who, according to news reports, was introduced to the head of the El Salvadoran Air Force by Donald Gregg, who is the national security adviser to Vice President BUSH. Both of these individuals, Gregg and Gomez, have had previous connections in previous years working for the CIA.

The Vice President has come forward to counter these charges. Let me quote what the Vice President said.

I know what he was doing in El Salvador and I strongly support it—that is, Max Gomez—as does the President of El Salvador Napoleon Duarte, and as does the chief of the armed forces in El Salvador, because this man, an expert in counterinsurgency, was down there helping them put down a Communist-led revolution.

That is a quote from the Washington Post of October 14. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire text of this article be inserted at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SALVADORAN GENERAL DISPUTES BUSH ON ROLE OF U.S. ADVISER

(By Edward Cody)

SAN SALVADOR, Oct. 13—The Salvadoran chief of staff, indirectly contradicting Vice President Bush, said today that no U.S. national could work for the Salvadoran military without the High Command's approval, and to his knowledge none has been given.

Gen. Adolfo Blandon, who made the statement to U.S. reporters, was addressing a declaration by Bush Saturday that a Cuban American—identified as leader of a secret supply program here for anti-Sandinista rebels—was a counterinsurgency specialist helping the Salvadoran government put down "a communist-led revolution" in their own country.

Salvadoran military leaders have denied their facilities were being used to move rebel supplies into Nicaragua or that their personnel were involved.

Bush has said a U.S. counterinsurgency adviser outside the regular U.S. military assistance program—and identified as chief of the anti-Sandinista resupply effort—was working directly with the Salvadoran government.

Bush, while in Charleston, S.C., said of the adviser, identified as Max Gomez: "I know what he was doing in El Salvador, and I strongly support it, as does the president of El Salvador, Mr. Napoleon Duarte, and as does the chief of the armed forces in El Salvador, because this man, an expert in counterinsurgency, was down there helping them put down a communist-led revolution."

Blandon, interviewed at the High Command, said this is impossible without his approval, which he said he has not given. "This intrigues me," he said of Bush's comments. It would have to be authorized not only by the joint chiefs of staff but also by the government."

Vice President Rodolfo Castillo Claramount said he knew nothing about the situation or the adviser, variously identified as Gomez or as Felix Rodriguez. President Jose Napoleon Duarte, in response to a number of reports from volunteer organizations and rebel officials over the past three years, has denied that Ilopongo Airport is being used to intervene in Nicaragua. He said Friday he knows nothing of Gomez's activities.

U.S. Ambassador Edwin Corr also said today that he does not know about the work allegedly being done by Gomez, to which Bush referred Saturday. A team of regular U.S. military advisers, including counterinsurgency specialists, has long operated in El Salvador out of the embassy headed by Corr.

A report in the Los Angeles Times said Gomez was attached to the Salvadoran Air Force on a private basis. Other reports said his ostensible job was to help train Salvadoran pilots for what is called the "Lightning Team." This group uses U.S.-supplied Hughes 500 light gunship helicopters to flush out leftist guerrillas in the Salvadoran hills for subsequent attack by infantry or heavier copter gunships.

But Lt. Col. Domingo Vargas, a commander in Morazan province who helped the Salvadoran Army develop its air-mobile counterinsurgency tactics, said he never heard of Gomez, Rodriguez or any other U.S. adviser to the helicopter squadron.

Blandon said Gomez would not be necessary for this work anyway, since "our pilots are among the best in Latin America." He said he would investigate further into what, if anything, Gomez was doing in El Salvador as described by Bush and into the reports linking him to a resupply operation for anti-Sandinista rebels, known as contras.

Bush's press secretary, Marlin Fitzwater, said yesterday that Gomez was steered to the Salvadoran government by an aide to Bush, Donald Gregg, who knew Gomez from the days when both worked for the CIA.

Eugene Hasenfus, who was captured in Nicaragua last week after the downing of a C123 cargo plane in which he said he was flying a contra supply run, identified Gomez as a CIA employe who headed a resupply program using as a major jump-off point the Salvadoran Air Force base at Ilopongo Airport on the outskirts of San Salvador.

Hasenfus said his job was to kick bundles out of the plane over the drop site in Nicaragua. This was reported to have been his job during earlier work for Air America during the Vietnam war, when the airline was a CIA cover. The two Americans in the plane who died, the pilot and copilot, also reportedly were associated with the CIA during the Vietnam war and Hasenfus said he thought they still were.

The Reagan administration repeatedly has denied the supply operation has anything to do with the U.S. government, including the CIA. It has declined to reveal what it knows about the operation, however, including what the Salvadoran military may have done to provide cover for it and what role Gomez played in it.

Mr. HARKIN. So the Vice President says, OK, I know what Gomez was doing in El Salvador. I support it. Not only do I support it, but the President of El Salvador supports it, and the chief of the armed forces in El Salvador supports it because Mr. Gomez, an expert in counterintelligence, was down there helping them, the El Salvadorans, put down a Communist revolution. Yet we are now told, by Hosenfus and by reporters in the United States that Mr. Gomez is at Ilopango running the supply forces for the Contras in Nicaragua, not in El Salvador.

Furthermore, the Salvadoran chief of staff, Gen. Adolfo Blandon, who I would think would know about such operations, has said he did not authorize the Gomez mission. President Duarte has said he knows nothing about Gomez' activities. Neither does our United States Ambassador in San Salvador, Ambassador Corr. They all say they know nothing of Gomez or his activities. The question just comes down to who is Mr. Max Gomez, and who should we believe about his activities?

No one appears to claim responsibility for Mr. Gomez, just as no one claims ownership for the C-123 downed in Nicaragua, and just as no one is claiming any responsibility for the Hasenfus mission. And no one is claiming responsibility. I might add sadly enough for Mr. Hasenfus himself.

What was Mr. Gomez' role in El Salvador? Under whose authority did he operate and does he continue to operate? Did he manage the Contra supply operations run from Ilopango as Mr. Hasenfus and numerous press stories allege? Did the Vice President know of Mr. Gomez' role in these operations? And did Mr. BUSH or his national security adviser, Mr. Gregg, provide adviser assistance to Max Gomez and those operations?

Mr. President, current law, section 105 of Public Law 99-169, states that funds available to the CIA, Department of Defense or National Security Council may be used to assist the Contras to support military or paramilitary operations in Nicaragua only for intelligence sharing. I repeat, "only for intelligence sharing." Does the performing of ground maintenance on a Contra supply flight qualify as intelligence sharing? Does loading the plane with arms qualify as intelligence sharing? Making out flight plans, making out payrolls, maybe even paying individuals—does this qualify as intelligence sharing? Who pays Mr. Gomez?

Well, some in the administration have claimed that he is paid by the Salvadoran Air Force. The Salvadoran Air Force says he does not work for them. Mr. Hasenfus says that he had his checks deposited in his bank account in Wisconsin. The least we could do is to find out on whom were those checks drawn? Who paid Mr. Hasenfus? Where did the money come from? Did Mr. Gregg in his capacity as an adviser to Vice President BUSH and as a representative of the National Security Council violate the law by providing advice or support of any kind to the Hasenfus flight—and thus I repeat "violate the law"?

Mr. President, these questions, involving charges of impropriety and illegal activity traced directly to the White House and the National Security Council, deserve a complete arising by the Congress? Yes. There is a smoking gun. And that smoking gun points directly at the National Security Council, at Mr. Gregg, and the Vice President of the United States. The least we can do, Mr. President, before running to go home to the upcoming elections, is to demand a full and complete accounting of all advice, logistical support or any other assistance provided by the U.S. Government personnel to the Hasenfus mission.

We must have a clear answer to this question before allowing the President and this administration to plunge deeper into the jungles of Central America. We must have a clear answer to this question before allowing any of the money that was passed, authorized, and now pending in the continuing resolution to be given to the contras to continue their proxy war against Nicaragua.

Nothing less than the authority of Congress, which has written the laws, and the credibility of this administration, which is supposed to obey those laws, are at stake. We have written the laws. We have enacted the laws. Yet, it looks as though this administration has done an end run around the laws, and may have violated the laws.

So we do need a clear accounting before we move ahead any further with any more money or any other funding or support for the contras. We should not tolerate this dirty little war being waged behind the backs of Congress, behind th backs of the American people, and in violation of the laws passed by the U.S. Congress.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, is morning business closed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ARMSTRONG). Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

OMNIBUS DRUG ENFORCEMENT, EDUCATION, AND CONTROL ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the unfinished business.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The question recurs on the further amendment, as modified, to the House amendment of the Senate amendment to H.R. 5484, the Antidrug Abuse Act of 1986.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me indicate this and I will yield the floor: I think the Senator from Michigan, Senator LEVIN, wished to discuss certain provisions in the drug bill. We are waiting for Senator HATCH and Senator THURMOND because I think we want to have some dialog and some colloquy. So we would like to do that for about the next hour or hour and a half, and then I will move later on to go into executive session to consider the nomination of James L. Malone.

Let me also indicate there is some hope now that we might have reconciliation before us by 6 or 7 o'clock this evening. If that is the case we will conclude action on that this evening.

It seems to me there are four major items that are just sort of out there. You cannot get a handle on them. There is the debt limit extension. There is a continuing resolution, reconciliation, and the drug bill.

Those are the four major items we must complete before we leave here. I think the drug bill, hopefully we can dispose of that. If we can do reconciliation I think that would start a little momentum around here that we have not had much of the last few days.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, if the leader will yield a moment while on the floor, there are many provisions in the drug bill other than the one relative to capital punishment which are of interest to a number of Members.

There are also many Members who are interested in this particular death penalty because of the way it is framed, its narrow limits, some of its unique features, and so forth.

The Senate has never debated a death penalty like this one before. It is worthy of some debate.

I want to inform the leader that we should, at least in my opinion, take the time to debate this provision if we cannot find a way out of this impasse, prior to cloture. This hour will be helpful, but I think we are going to need more than that because there are many speakers on this particular provision, many people who feel strongly about it as well as other provisions in your perfecting amendment of your substitute which are of interest to a number of Members of the Senate.

I hope the leader will factor in a time period in addition to this hour prior to that cloture vote tomorrow and give us some idea as to when reasonable debate on these provisions could occur prior to cloture.

Mr. DOLE. What I would hope, maybe we will do more of that later this evening, but if in fact this is our last week, I am not going to make any predictions at this point because I find everybody wanting to offer amendments, and I sort of had the feeling that it is really the first week in March around here instead of the third week in October.

We had at our policy luncheon all kinds of ideas on how to amend this or that. I thought people wanted to go home. If they do not, it is perfectly all right with me.

I would hope we can conclude our business by Friday of this week. There is some indication on the House side they may try to complete their work by tomorrow at midnight and obviously that would be very helpful because many of the things we are waiting on we are awaiting House action and if that would happen, then I think it would probably speed up the process on this side.

But we will try to work out some additional time for debate on that and other issues.

Mr. LEVIN. I have just been speaking with my friend, Senator THURMOND, and have gone over a number of questions that I wanted to ask him at this point relative to the amendment which is before us. These are the questions: The first question is whether or not he is able to tell us at this point how many drug-related deaths are of users of drugs and how many drug-related deaths which would be covered by this provision are of drug pushers, drug dealers, drug czars, and so forth? Whether there are any statistics available on that because we surely do not want to turn this into a drug dealer protection act.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, in response to the question, I would say that we will have to tabulate and supply that for the RECORD.

Mr. LEVIN. I thank my friend.

Second, can the Senator tell us whether or not there were any hearings in the Senate Judiciary Committee on this specific provision relating to drug-related deaths?

Mr. THURMOND. We have had hearings in the Judiciary Committee on the death penalty. In fact, we passed a death penalty amendment through the Senate I believe 3 years ago, it went to the House, and the House never did act on it. Now, on this particular form of death penalty, the drug-related death penalty, there have not been hearings on this specific charge.

Mr. LEVIN. I thank my friend on that.

Do we know whether or not there were any hearings in the House on this specific provision?

Mr. THURMOND. I do not know whether the House held any or not.

Mr. LEVIN. My next question relates to prior bills which have come to the floor and which have been passed by the Senate. Has this specific provision relating to drug-related deaths been part of any prior death penalty bill which——

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield on that last question? Since I am with our chairman today, I might mention, I am not sure we need hearings on this because basically the language says, "if an individual intentionally engages in conduct during the course of the continuing criminal enterprise and thereby knowingly causes the death of any other individual, the individual so engaging shall be subject to the death penalty in accordance with this section," and then the procedures are outlined.

Now, as the distinguished Senator knows, our youth in this country are being destroyed by drugs, they are being destroyed by people who want to make monetary gain from drugs and who are making huge profits. These people could care less about whether people die or whether they lose their mental sanity or whether families are broken up, whether children are lost or not. Frankly, until we get really tough with those who are pushing drugs in our society, knowing that they might cause the death of others, I do not think you are going to see any real erosion in their ability to do so. And so the reason for putting this provision into the bill is to get tough against the most vicious people in our society, who literally are causing deaths all over our country and know they are causing deaths and could care less because they are getting wealthy, and they use the wealth from that criminal enterprise to go out and do other criminal things with it. So that is the reason why it is here.

I am not sure having any type of hearings is going to add anything to what I have said with regard to how many people would be lost; that would vary from year to year; it would vary from community to community. It would be still a very difficult thing to prove, but by putting it in here, you are serving notice on this whole criminal drug pushing community that we have had enough; we are not going to put up with it any more, and our children have had enough, and this country is not going to put up with it any more. So that is the reason for the provision, and I am not just sure hearings would help in any way, shape, or form.

Mr. LEVIN. I think hearings are very useful.

Mr. HATCH. They could be, but I am saying I do not think anybody thinks that they are crucial to understanding what we are really trying to do here because literally, literally what these people are doing is destroying America, and they are destroying the youth of America as well as others.

Mr. LEVIN. I can assure my friend from Utah that nobody exceeds this particular Senator in understanding the plague of drugs. I happen to live in a city which has been plagued by drugs for a long time. This has been a vicious thing going on for a long time.

Mr. HATCH. It is.

Mr. LEVIN. A very long time, and yet this provision on drug-related deaths has never been in a death penalty bill, ever.

Mr. HATCH. That does not mean——

Mr. LEVIN. I happen to agree with my friend from Utah, this is about as vicious an offense as I can consider also. I do not know of too many more vicious offenses than selling drugs. The problem with this is I believe—and the statistics my friend from South Carolina is going to try to provide—I believe that most of the people who are guilty of drug-related murder are drug pushers.

Mr. HATCH. Some of them are.

Mr. LEVIN. They are drug dealers, drug czars. Those are the people that I do not particulary want to protect. I do not want to turn this into a drug dealer protection act and for those——

Mr. HATCH. Of the Senator——

Mr. LEVIN. If I could just finish the sentence. For those who take the position that the death penalty deters, I believe in most cases what you will be deterring is not the sale of a drug to a young person, to a user. That is what we want to deter. That is why I added the mandatory sentence in this particular drug bill a week ago—to make sure that anybody who sells a quantity of drugs to a young person goes to prison. That was not in this bill before we added it on the floor. That is what it is going to deter. But most of the murders that occur, I believe—and we will get the statistics from my friend from South Carolina—most of the murders that occur in this area are the pushers, the czars, and these are the people, frankly, I am not particularly interested in protecting.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator will yield on that, if you are not interested in those people——

Mr. LEVIN. I am interested in justice. I am interested in justice.

Mr. HATCH. So am I. Now, let me just say this. I do not agree with the statement that they are the people who are likely to die from the overuse of drugs. I have seen 10-, 12-, 14-, 16-year-old children who have died from the misuse of drugs. We saw Lenny Bias die from the misuse of drugs. I do not believe anybody believes he was a pusher or within the syndicate.

Mr. LEVIN. I could not agree more with the Senator.

Mr. HATCH. You can talk about drug-related deaths by people, caused by these criminals and criminal enterprises that know that it is likely to cause death.

Let me just say, we did not say, "likely to cause death." We said, "If an individual intentionally engages in conduct during the course of a continuing criminal enterprise"—it cannot be a one-shot deal, but a continuing criminal enterprise—"and thereby knowingly"—we do not say willfully or wrongfully, we say knowingly, so that is even a more stringent test—"causes the death of any other individual, the individual so engaging shall be subject * * *" It does not mean he or she has to be, but shall be subject to the death penalty.

Now, it is our contention that not only does the death penalty deter—of course, there is a huge debate on both sides of that issue. We know one thing, it deters that person who suffers the death penalty from ever doing criminal conduct again.

Mr. LEVIN. If I could go back to my questions.

Mr. HATCH. Sure.

Mr. LEVIN. I think my friend from Utah would agree with the Senator from South Carolina in any event; we do not know whether the great proportion of drug-related deaths are the drug addict, the user, or the drug pusher and the czar, we do not have those figures—we will get that from the Senator from South Carolina, but if I can just finish, we do know that this provision has never been the subject of hearings before the Judiciary Committee. This is a vicious crime, indeed, but that the Judiciary Committee has never sought prior to today to propose this particular provision in the death penalty statute. We know that. There have been no hearings. We do not know if there have been hearings——

Mr. THURMOND. If the Senator will yield——

Mr. LEVIN. If I could just finish the summary. We do not know if there have been hearings in the House, as I understand from the Senator from South Carolina. We do know, if I understand Senator THURMOND correctly, that in all the death penalty bills which has come before us, this provision has never been included. Is that correct?

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I might say that a few years ago when I grew up, for instance, the drug business was not the massive business it is today. Not as many people used drugs, not as many older people used drugs, and the drug problem really was not the serious problem it is today. But because now it is such a serious problem and thousands of lives are being destroyed by it, it has caused the public to feel that steps must be taken to slow down and possibly terminate the use of so many drugs; and as time passes, you have to pass laws to devise new crimes. So this is a new crime so far as the drug business is concerned.

Mr. LEVN. Where I come from, this is not a new crime. Drugs have plagued our communities for a long time, and I agree that we are acting on it in some appropriate ways.

My question is this: If it is correct that in all the bills that have come from the Judiciary Committee to this floor, which we have either passed or considered, never before was this provision added to a bill? Is that a fair statement?

Mr. THURMOND. Heretofore, the death penalty, from the Judiciary Committee, prescribed murder, it prescribed treason, it prescribed espionage, and it prescribed attempts to kill a President. It did not contain a provision similar to this. But since the drug business has gotten worse in the last 3 years, if we had a bill today, the probability is that the Judiciary Committee would include this facet of the death penalty in the bill.

Mr. LEVIN. My last question is this: There is a provision here, as the Senator from Utah indicated, that the individual must knowingly cause the death of another individual. My question is this: The fifth mitigating factor is that the defendant could not reasonably have foreseen that his conduct in the course of the commission of the offense resulting in death for which the defendant was convicted would cause or would create a grave risk of causing death to any person.

My question of either Senator is the following: Can a defendant be convicted of knowingly causing the death of another person if that person could not reasonably have foreseen that his conduct in the course of the commission of the offense resulting in death for which the defendant was convicted would cause or would create a grave risk of causing death to any person?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. THURMOND. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The statutory language is interesting. It says:

> If an individual intentionally engages in conduct during the course of a continuing criminal enterprise and thereby knowingly causes the death of any other individual, the individual so engaging shall be subject to the death penalty in accordance with this section.

You have the two factors: One is the intentional engaging in criminal conduct—in other words, drug pushing in this case—and knowing that it will cause the death of another person.

Knowing means that he knows of the likelihood of death. It does not necessarily mean that death has to be certain.

If a person fires a gun at another person, he does not have to know that the bullet will hit its mark. It is sufficient that he knows he is endangering that other person's life by his act. This means that there could be an aspect of uncertainty. The drug pusher could be pushing a drug which is likely to cause death onto the market. This uncertainty is a factor of aggravation to be considered in the overall context after knowing—after the knowing conviction was in that person's mind. So it is not clearcut, but it is pretty darn clear.

Mr. LEVIN. Maybe I can rephrase my question.

If the defendant could not reasonably have foreseen that his conduct in the course of the commission of the offense that resulted in death for which he is convicted would cause or would create a grave risk of causing death to any person, can that defendant, who could not have reasonably foreseen that, still be given the death penalty?

Mr. HATCH. That would be a mitigating circumstance.

Mr. LEVIN. But could that person still be given the death penalty?

Mr. HATCH. It would be a mitigating circumstance. There is a potential that a jury could believe that that person knowingly pushed that drug that would cause the death of another person.

Mr. LEVIN. So that I can get a clear record on this: It is possible that even though the defendant could not reasonably have foreseen that his conduct in the course of the commission of the offense that resulted in death for which he was convicted would cause or would create a grave risk of causing death, that person still could be given the death penalty?

Mr. HATCH. If that person reasonably could not have foreseen, I do not believe that person would be subject to the death penalty. That person would have to know.

As I say, there is an uncertainty, because he may not know whether this particular person is going to die. But if death does occur and he knows that the drug can cause death to that particular person, then he or she will be subject to the death penalty.

Mr. LEVIN. Would it not be correct to say that instead of this being a mitigating factor, it is, in fact, a required element of the offense, that the defendant should reasonably have foreseen that his conduct would cause or would create a grave risk of causing the death of some person?

Mr. HATCH. I think it could be, under some circumstances, an aspect of knowing. Therefore, the person could be held responsible. But if there was no way that person could reasonably have known that the pushing of this drug would cause death, it would not be knowing, and I think this language would exclude that person from the death penalty.

Mr. LEVIN. This, then, should properly be an element of the offense rather than one mitigating factor.

Mr. HATCH. That is right.

Mr. LEVIN. I thank my friend.

Mr. THURMOND. That is listed here as No. 5, under "mitigating factors." In other words, a judge would take into consideration that as a mitigating factor.

If you want to move to strike out No. 5, I think we could agree to that.

Mr. LEVIN. I point out that there has been no hearing on this provision. It has never been in a death bill before; and now, coming to the floor for the first time, we have a suggestion with respect to the death penalty that it is a mitigating factor. It simply goes to the point that that is what hearings are all about.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, people who deal in drugs, as some of these kingpins do, causing death of people, and having caused the deaths of hundreds of people, you are bound to put them in a category of a person who kills others. When he does it knowingly and sells these drugs and participates in such a way that it is intentional, why should not the death penalty be allowed there, as in these other matters that are required by law?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the House amendment with an amendment. Is there further debate?

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1650

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, in just a few moments, I will ask unanimous consent that we go to a nomination. I think there will be an objection to that. Then I will move to go to the nomination and there will be a rollcall vote on that.

But I wanted to indicate precisely where we are, if we are anywhere. We are still here. That is the first mistake.

But, we are still waiting. We thought we might have the immigration conference report. The conferees have completed action on the immigration bill. The House will not act until tomorrow morning.

There is still an outside chance we can have reconciliation later tonight. There is no chance that we can have the continuing resolution; apparently no chance that the debt limit extension will be available tonight. There will be a cloture vote on the anti drug bill tomorrow.

So we have the big four, now the big five, because immigration has been added. We would like to dispose of all those major pieces of legislation.

In addition, there are a number of other items maybe of not the same priority but of great priority to some Members on each side. We are in the process, with staff, of working out a number of those less substantial pieces of legislation.

THE ICELAND SUMMIT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, we have just completed an hour and 15 minute session with Secretary Shultz, the Secretary of State. Again, he briefed Members, Republicans and Democrats, on the Iceland meeting, what happened there. He was present during all the discussions with the President and Mr. Gorbachev and he tried to clarify questions that Members had on each side. He again indicated, as far as he was concerned, that we made substantial progress in Reykjavik. The President having said that this morning, and this afternoon the Secretary of State, there is no doubt in my mind the administration feels that they have made a big step in the right direction. The door is still open.

I did not hear Mr. Gorbachev's press conference but, as I understand, he gave some indication that the door was still slightly ajar. So, in any event, that has taken up a lot of time this afternoon.

There was some debate on the death penalty.

There is still some opportunity on reconciliation. I understand there may be a meeting between the chairman of the Finance Committee and the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. If not, we will just try to pull out that part of the reconcilation package. In the long run, it may save more money, because there are a number of new spenders in that little package.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I wonder if the distinguished majority leader might engage in a colloquy with me about Iceland. I was not here when you addressed the Senate with reference to the briefings that the Secretary of State just gave us, but I understand that you were optimistic in terms of your assessment; is that correct, as far as the future?

Mr. DOLE. I think optimistic in a couple of senses. First of all, there has been no—with rare exception any effort—effort to sort of politicize what happened in Iceland either by Republicans or Democrats. Second, from what I have heard the President say, and what I have heard Secretary Shultz say, there is some reason for optimism.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. Majority Leader, I concur in that. In fact, I think it is such a historic event that we ought not be talking about winners and losers. I do not think anyone won, or anyone lost at Iceland. If anything, there is a real chance that the whole world will win in the not too distant future.

When you look back at the last 15 or 20 years of arms limitation negotiations, and you see where we were, where SALT I was, where SALT II was, and where we are now, and what occurred there between those leaders, one of the Soviet Union and one of the free world, and you see how far they went, obviously they did not reach an agreement but who would have believed that we could be here today talking about negotiations that went as far as those negotiations went.

Actually, it appears to this Senator that we ought to all be very proud of the President of the United States. For those who wondered whether he was sincere, I just cannot believe you could have found a more dramatic set of proposals, and they are all open in public. This is not one person talking about it. Everyone agrees that while these were private sessions they made proposals that are now before this whole world, and that we are aware of them. That is a gigantic accomplishment for the President of the United States and the leader of the Soviet Union. I have nothing but compliments for the President of the United States.

And on SDI, it is pretty hard for us to figure in our minds what the Soviet Union is talking about and thinking about. But one thing is certain. They would not have been in Iceland but for SDI in my opinion. They would not have been there but for the military buildup that has occurred in the last 6 years. I do not believe they would have been there but for the change of attitude of the free world that has occurred in the last 6 years. I think all of those things contributed to the leaders of the Soviet Union saying it is time that we sit down and talk about these things, and that we enter into some real bona fide limitation agreements on nuclear armament.

Who would have thought they could have even been talking about 10 years from now zero nuclear ballistic missiles in the arsenals of the two superpowers?

So I compliment the distinguished majority leader for his optimism, and the way he has reacted. And the Senate in my opinion with few exceptions has reacted rather upbeat, optimistically, and clearly in a manner that is calculated to let this preliminary set of discussions continue on complemented by solid, optimistic, intelligent discussions, and not criticism.

RECONCILIATION

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, having said that, I would say to the leader the reconciliation bill but for the Ways and Means and Finance Committee portion is finished. I am just beginning to review it in detail. I do want to say to the distinguished majority leader there are significant quantities of material in this reconciliation aside from Ways and Means and Finance that is extraneous in the technical sense. I am just beginning to look at them to see whether the leadership ought to have some unified policy or whether I should suggest some with reference to the extraneous material that is in the bill.

I yield the floor and thank the majority leader.

SUPERFUND

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield for a question of a scheduling nature if this is an opportune time to do so?

Mr. DOLE. I am happy to.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I want to ask the majority leader about whether or not he had any indication from the White House about whether or not the President is going to sign or veto Superfund? As you know, 55 of our colleagues joined me and the senior Senator from California in a letter to the majority leader requesting a pro forma session with a specific date for a return, if necessary to deal with a Superfund veto.

I learned today that Majority Leader WRIGHT in the House has proposed that the House stay in session long enough to deal with the veto. The House reportedly will stay in session long enough both to avoid a pocket veto, and to override a veto. I was curious as to whether or not the majority leader had any plans for us to deal with the veto possibility.

Mr. DOLE. I would say at the rate we are going we will probably be here a week from Wednesday. With the amount of progress we have made today, we came in at 10 o'clock and have not done one thing. We are trying to get one vote here. I would like to have people who want to object, if they could, to come to the floor. It would make it easier. I would like to proceed with something today.

As far as whether or not the President will sign the Superfund, I think the President is concerned about the rather substantial increases it places on business. I think he would prefer that the programmatic changes be dealt with—in other words, the 5-year programmatic changes be dealt with—and that the money that is fenced in the HUD bill, $1.5 billion, plus the normal funding be used in the first year of Superfund to give Congress an additional year to determine how we are going to finance the program. That, as I understand it, is the way the President would like to deal with it.

Failing that, there might be a possibility the President would sign the bill if in fact he had some assurance from a number of Senators in this body that we are not going to raise taxes again next year or the next year because once this is in place, once we start raising taxes on a lot of companies around the country, it would be easy to come back and say well we need another $1 billion this year.

So I believe they are looking at those options plus obviously there have been some who recommend a veto. But I cannot be more certain.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I assume that the majority leader is not ascribing the lack of progress today about my inquiry about Superfund.

Mr. DOLE. No.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. But the fact of the matter is whatever action the President takes, taking such action before we adjourn would permit us to vote to override a veto, should one be forthcoming. I ask, therefore, whether the majority leader be willing to commit to ensuring a response by this body? With regard to the majority leader's discussion of White House concerns over future Superfund tax increases, I cannot give any assurance as to the further taxing intentions of the Senate. I am not on the Finance Committee as the majority leader knows. That matter would have to be discussed, I assume, by those Members and those of the House Ways and Means Committee, as well as the conferees who came to an agreement on the tax provisions of the conference report on H.R. 2005.

So absent any ability to make a contribution there, I would once again ask the majority leader whether or not it would be his intention to ensure that the Senate could address the Superfund veto if one occurs.

Mr. DOLE. I would hope we are out of here by Friday evening. I have no plans to stay another 4 or 5 days or longer if we can avoid it. There are a number of Members who would like to see this Congress adjourn. Some are running; some are not running. So I do not have anything else at this point.

I would like to move to the nomination if we can do that.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. One final observation I would make is that the House's intention to stay in session both to prevent a pocket veto and to override a veto would prevent the Senate from adjourning sine die. I welcome this news from the leadership in the House, and believe that this decision will ensure that Congress can override a Superfund veto. I am committed to seeing the Superfund reauthorization enacted. I thank the majority leader.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I do not want to delay the distinguished majority leader, but I also share a concern here. I hope we could get some assurance from the White House that there would be no veto of the Superfund if we go out. I would not want to see us out of session next Tuesday, I guess that is the 21st, when the 10 days, I believe, will run its course, and the President would be able to pocket veto the Superfund legislation.

So I would like to discuss the matter with the distinguished majority leader privately later to see if there is a possibility we could get some assurance from the White House that it would not be pocket vetoed and make some arrangements if we could to be around in the event it is vetoed.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, in response to the distinguished minority leader, I do not really know what the White House intentions are. The President has been occupied over the weekend. I think they probably did discuss Superfund in Iceland. But it is an important piece of legislation. He is back. I am certain he will focus on that, and may have already done it today. I cannot say for certain. I have indicated to the White House liaison that certainly there is a great deal of interest in it here.

I think we ought to wait and see what materializes before we get into a position where the President cannot do anything but veto it. I would hope he would sign it.

Mr. BYRD. Yes; I would hope he would. But there was a reference to discussing it in Iceland. I would want to discuss the matter further with the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. I think one of the concerns the President has might be one of the concerns of the distinguished minority leader, how much tax these companies can afford to pay. It is great to have $8 or $9 billion. But there is a big problem out there. We are hearing from a lot of companies—oil, chemical, and others—who feel they have about reached the limit in their capacity to pay taxes. I would be happy to discuss that with the minority leader.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the majority leader.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NOMINATION OF JAMES L. MALONE, OF VIRGINIA, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO BELIZE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the nomination.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of James L. Malone, of Virginia, to be Ambassador to Belize.

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will come to order.

The Senator may proceed.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I suggest to the Chair that the Senate still is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senators in the aisles will please retire to the cloakroom.

The Senate is now in order. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, what we have just witnessed is a bottom of the ninth inning attempt at a political assassination. What we have here, in the nomination of James L. Malone, is simply a case of the harassing of a nominee of the President of the United States because the nominee did an excellent job in carrying out the President's policy.

Time and time again, it has been shown that various allegations made against Mr. Malone are absolutely baseless, and yet this harassment has persisted for the better part of a year and a half. There are those among his opponents—not all of them, but some of them—who were eager proponents of the negotiations for the proposed Law of the Sea Treaty. When the Reagan administration came in, the President, Ronald Reagan, insisted that the U.S. national interests be fully protected, and his conclusion was that U.S. interests would not be protected by the treaty draft.

We all know that it was excellent staff work by Mr. Malone that raised the issues and attempted to guarantee the protection of our national interests. For that reason, he has been the object of a campaign of vindictive vengeance by some—not all, but most—and this vote confirms it in spades.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HELMS. No, I will not.

The charges raised against Mr. Malone have been answered, as I say, time and time again, and I believe that any objective persons would admit that there has been no impropriety whatsoever on Mr. Malone's part.

Let us look back at the history of this nomination, Mr. President. When Mr. Malone's nomination came up for a vote before the Foreign Relations Committee, a letter was circulated by some of our colleagues raising all these charges once more. But it was shown that the letter contained demonstrable errors; and, as I recall, some of Mr. Malone's opponents reluctantly agreed that the accusations were in fact wrong.

First, the letter said that Mr. Malone continued to represent clients while on the President's transition team and dealing with nonproliferation matters. So what? There is no impropriety here whatsoever. Service on the transition team was entirely voluntary.

Second, the letter said that as Assistant Secretary of State for OES, Mr. Malone involved himself in a matter where a former client had a direct financial interest. The truth is that the party in question, Taiwan Power, was a client of Mr. Malone's law firm but not Mr. Malone's personal client.

Third, the letter said that Mr. Malone was "found" to have violated certain written commitments to the committee with respect to recusing himself for matters involving former clients. There was no such finding, Mr. President. There was an unproved allegation raised by a certain member of the committee.

Anyone can raise whatever allegations they desire, but that does not constitute a finding of the committee.

Fourth, there was a reference to violation of certain written commitments, and again that was nothing more than a baseless allegation. The fact is that the written commitment signed by Mr. Malone, approved by the committee, only extended to recusal in matters where he had been directly involved. There were some who sought to broaden that recusal agreement to cover any action in any country where his law firm had ever done any business whatsoever. But the committee did not require the broader demand, and quite properly one. Moreover, there was a finding by the legal advisor for the State Department that Mr. Malone's actions in the recusal were proper.

Fifth, in the matter involving Taiwan Power, it should be noted that Taiwan Power was not—and I repeat for emphasis, was not—Mr. Malone's client in the firm. The only thing he ever had to do with Taiwan Power was to contribute to a monthly bulletin, which went to several clients, detailing certain legal deadlines and events. That was it. That was the sum total of it, and there is no evidence whatsoever to the contrary. Moreover, the actions in which Mr. Malone was involved at OES did not involve the financial interests of Taiwan Power, so there was no need to recuse himself even if Taiwan Power had been his client. As a matter of fact, Mr. Malone did recuse himself on other issues where Taiwan Power did have a financial interest.

Sixth, it has been said that Mr. Malone falsely testified to the committee that he had sought permission from his superiors at the State Department before violating his written pledge to the committee; and later in writing admitted this was untrue. Well, first of all, he did not testify falsely. He testified in good faith, and he answered truthfully. As I recall, the then chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, Mr. Percy, had asked Mr. Malone whether he had discussed the matter with Dick Kennedy, then the ambassador for nuclear affairs. Mr. Malone said that he had. But there was room in this for misinterpretation. Mr. Malone thought the context was the general issue of Exim-

Bank funding. After all, there was no need to discuss the recusal issue as such since Ambassador Kennedy was already fully aware of the recusal agreement. So, Mr. Malone, on his own initiative, clarified this in a letter to the Foreign Relations Committee. There was, of course, no admission of false testimony because there had been no false testimony to begin with.

Finally, there was never any such report of the inspector general as was supposedly quoted in the letter. What was quoted was a draft that had been drawn up by some of Mr. Malone's State Department opponents, on the Law of the Sea Treaty—a draft, mind you, Mr. President, a draft that was never approved, a draft that was never issued. We do not even know who wrote it. We tried to find out. The draft was stolen from the State Department but it was yet presented by some of my colleagues and others as some kind of judgment.

Mr. President, it may seem stale to drag up old charges that have been made against Mr. Malone and refute them, but the record needs to be made clear that the charges simply are without foundation. So today, obviously, to look at the rollcall vote that was just taken, the opposition is purely political.

The only reason for opposition to Mr. Malone is the fact that he was a solid supporter of President Reagan and President Reagan's policies. He helped President Reagan carry out his policies, and those who do not like President Reagan's policies are attempting to punish Mr. Malone for his success in carrying out those policies.

Mr. President, it is perfectly obvious what is going on here. I would think that those who oppose Mr. Malone for whatever reason would certainly be willing to let the Senate decide on this, particularly since the majority leader is willing to offer a unanimous-consent agreement where all of the State Department nominees can be acted upon, including one or two that I do not care for.

Now, if I am willing to forego my objections to, and my opposition to nominees, it seems to me that the other side would be willing to forego politics for just a little bit and let all of these nominees be confirmed and promoted, as is the case with one, and proceed with our business.

But, no, I understand that there is going to be a filibuster on this nomination and, if that is true, the Senator or Senators who participate in it will be in their rights. But I do not want to hear any more talk about who is holding up nominations because the Senator from North Carolina is perfectly willing to let a whole gaggle of nominations go through, some of which he does not particularly like and in fact has objected to. My objective is to let the Senate vote on all the nominations, without exception.

So let the shoe be on the right foot now from this point on and we will see who is holding up the entire list of State Department nominations. It will not be a Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. President, I thank the Chair and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, today the Senate is being asked to consider the nomination of James L. Malone to the position of Ambassador to Belize. I believe that Members of the Senate should be made aware of the long history of this nomination before deciding whether it is appropriate to support this nomination. Regrettably, in my view, the evidence overwhelmingly dictates that the Senate reject this nomination.

We on the Foreign Relations Committee are quite familiar with Mr. Malone. He has appeared before the committee on a number of occasions and those appearances have not left a particularly good impression of him. On May 5, 1981, the committee acted on Mr. Malone's nomination as Assistant Secretary of State for the Bureau of Oceans, Environmental and Scientific Affairs [OES], deciding by a vote of 10 to 5, to report his nomination favorably to the Senate. His nomination was subsequently acted upon by the full Senate on May 21 of that year.

Even in his first appearance before the committee in connection with the OES nomination, Mr. Malone generated considerable controversy. The committee's consideration of his nomination entailed weeks of negotiations between the committee, Mr. Malone, and the State Department's Legal Advisor's Office. Those 6 weeks of negotiations culminated in an agreement on an appropriate standard to guide Mr. Malone so that the committee could be confident that he would avoid problems of the appearances of conflicts of interest, or other improprieties in the course of his duties at OES. These standards were essential, in my view, given the questions which had been raised, by Senator GLENN, who was then a member of the committee, and others, as to whether Mr. Malone could carry out his nuclear-related duties at OES, in a fair and impartial manner, after having provided legal services, while in private law practice, to a number of nuclear utilities, including Taiwan Power Co.

These standards, which Mr. Malone pledged to adhere to in a May 4, 1981 letter to Senator Percy then the chairman of the committee, included a commitment that he would, "disqualify myself from particular matters which because of involvement or interests of my prior firm, colleagues or clients, my participation would give rise to an actual or apparent conflict or appearance of impropriety." These standards were even more detailed when it came to specific actions which Mr. Malone might be expected to take in carrying out those duties as Assistant Secretary which would have a direct effect on Taiwan Power Co. or one of the other nuclear utilities which he had represented:

> I will disqualify myself from ruling on export licenses and reprocessing requests for Taiwan Power Company . . . and from ruling on all substantially related matters involving any of (those) firms. . . .

Because of these assurances by Mr. Malone, I was prepared to give him the benefit of the doubt, and therefore, I supported his confirmation as Assistant Secretary of OES. I was confident, after having gone through such a long and difficult process, where at times it appeared that Mr. Malone would not be confirmed, that he had been sufficiently sensitized to the conflict of interest problem.

Therefore, it came as a great surprise to me when Mr. Malone appeared before the committee on May 13, 1982 in connection with his nomination to the position of Ambassador-at-Large for the Law of Sea, to find that he had been right in the thick of Government deliberations concerning the terms and size of a direct loan to Taiwan Power Co. from the U.S. Export-Import [Ex-Im] Bank for the purpose of building a nuclear power facility.

I questioned Mr. Malone at great length to try to ascertain how he could have personally lobbied the president of Ex-Im Bank on behalf of Taiwan Power Co., given the commitments he had made to the committee. That questioning was no easy process because Mr. Malone was not a very forthcoming witness. He often attempted to mislead members of the committee, in my view, by answering in a manner which, while technically correct, would have left the wrong impression if not pursued further. An example of such an incident was during my questioning of his relationship to Taiwan Power Co., while at the law firm of Doub and Muntzing. Mr. Malone seems to have a rather narrow definition of what consitutes an attorney/client relationship—according to him, unless he personally bills the company, he does not consider it his client. When asked whether the firm had billed Taiwan Power for the services that he had performed, he said that he did not know, although he did admit after much discussion that he had submitted time sheets for the work he performed for Taiwan Power Co. I don't know of any law firm in town which provides free services for work done by its attorneys, thus it is fair to assume that Taiwan Power Co.

had paid for legal services provided by Mr. Malone.

If Mr. Malone had had any doubt as to whether the committee would consider his activities on behalf of Taiwan Power to be a breach of his agreement with this committee, he should have consulted with members to ascertain their views, or at the very least, discussed this matter with his superiors. He did none of these. In fact, he told the committee, under questioning by Senator Percy, that he had consulted with Under Secretary Richard Kennedy as to the propriety of his involvement in the Taiwan Power matter. In a subsequent letter to Senator Percy on May 21, 1982, he was forced to retract this statement. "I did not discuss the propriety of my involvement in this matter with Under Secretary Kennedy or other senior officials."

After that letter was received, it became painfully clear that there were insufficient votes on the committee to report the nomination to the full Senate. On July 27, 1982, the President withdrew Mr. Malone's nomination from consideration by the Senate.

Unfortunately, Mr. Malone remained in his first position as Assistant Secretary of OES after this nomination was withdrawn, until July of last year. At that time, Ambassador John Negroponte took that position—a welcome change in my view. That left Mr. Malone without a position. So, once again the President has decided to send forward the name of James Malone to the Senate for consideration to yet another position—at this time as U.S. Ambassador to Belize. Mind you, at no time in the ensuing period have any of the matters which clouded the consideration of the earlier nominations of Mr. Malone been resolved.

Mr. Malone was questioned at some length by Senator KERRY on February 19 when the committee held a hearing on this nomination. In addition, extensive written questions were submitted to Mr. Malone by Senator ZORINSKY in an honest attempt to afford him ample opportunity to remove the doubts concerning the suitability of Mr. Malone for this position which many of us had come to hold. Unfortunately, Mr. Malone did not succeed in clearing the air, but rather, added to the list of doubts already in existence.

On April 10, 1986 the Committee on Foreign Relations refused to report this nomination to the full Senate either favorably or unfavorably by votes of 7 to 9 and 8 to 9, respectively. In the view of the minority members of the committee the matter was closed as no member sought reconsideration of either vote on that day, or in the ensuing 2 days, as provided by rule 13 of the Standing Rules of the Senate.

In a last-ditch attempt to move the nomination of Mr. Malone, the majority members of the committee reported this nomination favorably on September 30 by a vote of 9 to 0. Minority members of the committee did not participate in that meeting, because we felt that the committee had already acted definitively on the matter and that only by unanimous consent would it be in order for the committee to reconsider either vote. We strongly believe that the majority members of the committee acted in a manner inconsistent with the Standing Rules of the Senate and the committee's own rules in reporting this nomination to the full Senate. This is a most unfortunate action in my view. Rules are established to protect the rights of every Member of the Senate—to ignore them under any circumstances, and particularly in this situation where the evidence is clear that Mr. Malone is unworthy of the position to which he has been nominated, does damage to the very legislative framework created to ensure that the Senate functions effectively.

In conclusion, in my view, the Senate has a right to expect that individuals nominated to hold public office will hold themselves to a high personal standard in keeping with their public trust. In Mr. Malone's case, the Foreign Relations Committee made it easy for him by providing specific guidelines for him to follow. He ignored the spirit, if not the letter of that standard, despite the pledges he had made. Furthermore, he attempted to mislead members of the committee about the actions he had taken, as well as being inaccurate about seeking permission from his superiors prior to his involvement. For all of these reasons, I will not be able to support Mr. Malone's nomination. I am sorry that Mr. Malone failed to live up to the trust that I and other members of the committee placed in him. I do not believe that the Senate should support the nomination of James Malone to the position of Ambassador to Belize.

Mr. ZORINSKY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. ZORINSKY. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. President, I think, possibly to give a more in-depth background to the opposition that I and some of my colleagues have on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee with regard to the confirmation of the nomination of James L. Malone, in order to give depth to our views, I think it would be appropriate for me to read from the committee report the additional views of the minority members. So I would like to begin by doing that.

We strongly oppose the nomination of James L. Malone to the position of Ambassador to Belize. We believe that he is unsuited to serve as a U.S. Ambassador in light of his poor performance as Assistant Secretary of State for the Bureau of Oceans and International Environmental and Scientific Affairs (OES) and his lack of candor in his appearances before the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Many of the problems and questions which arose during Mr. Malone's previous appearances before the Foreign Relations Committee in connection with his nominations to other positions within the State Department re-emerged during his confirmation hearing of February 19th. Mr. Malone's responses to extensive questioning by members of the committee during hearings and to written questions for the record did not allay our concerns.

Our concerns were shared by a majority of the members of the committee on April 10th, when this nomination was considered by the committee at its business meeting. At that time the committee refused to report the nomination either favorably or unfavorably by votes of 7-9, with one voting present, and 8-9, respectively. In our view this closed the matter.

In addition to our objections to this nomination on substantive grounds which we have outlined below, we also must lodge a strong objection to the manner in which this nomination was handled by the Majority members of the committee. We believe that the Majority members of the committee acted without regard for the rules of the committee and in a manner inconsistent with the Standing Rules of the Senate—and this has established a most unfortunate precedent. We seriously question why such action was taken on Mr. Malone's nomination when the evidence clearly suggests that U.S. foreign policy interests will not be served by his confirmation.

The committee considered the nomination on April 10th. In our view, since no member sought to reconsider either vote on that day, or on the 2 days immediately following such vote as specified by Senate Rule XIII, this matter had been definitively disposed of by the committee. When we were notified that the chairman of the committee intended to place the Malone nomination before the committee in September, we informed the chairman of the committee by letter on September 15th of the concerns this raised in our minds. We informed him that we would be unable to participate in any reconsideration of this nomination.

That letter is also appended in the report of the nomination of James L. Malone, which I also would like to read into the RECORD. It is addressed to RICHARD G. LUGAR, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: We were quite surprised to receive a notice of your intention to ask the Committee to reconsider the nomination of James L. Malone to the position of U.S. Ambassador to Belize. It is our view that the action of the Committee on April 10 rejecting motions to report that nomination favorably or unfavorably by votes of 7-9 and 8-9, respectively, has fully disposed of this nomination.

For those people who are not familiar with the process that takes place in the Foreign Relations Committee, I might point out that this was the first time in the history of the U.S. Government where a Presidential Ambassador nomination has been voted down, not only voted down but voted not even to send it forward to the full Senate without the recommendation from the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. Malone has been nominated to three different positions within the Committee's jurisdiction since 1981. The President was forced to withdraw his name from consideration as Ambassador at Large for the Law of the Sea Negotiations when it became clear that the Committee would not support his nomination.

I might point out at this point the view that it really is not in the best interest of this Nation for Mr. Malone at this point in history to be appointed Ambassador. I have talked to some people in Belize, average people, citizens who are familiar with some of the actions that have occurred in the Foreign Relations Committee, and they think that they are receiving the booby prize from the U.S. Senate now—one who was voted down in committee, one who 4 months ago did not pass the muster test in committee, and due to the fact that there has been a recent switch of vote of a member of the committee now this reconsideration comes about. And I know if I were a citizen of Belize, I would feel a little shortchanged and shorthanded by the Government of the United States of America and its citizens to send me an Ambasssador to represent this Nation that they thought so much of 4 months ago that he became the first Ambassador ever to be voted down for an ambassadorship.

To me, if I was a member of the constituency of Belize, I would not think very highly of a country that sent me an ambassador of that caliber. And I think that is why at this point in history to resurrect a lost nomination through a switch of an individual member of the Foreign Relations Committee who has changed his vote to reconsider and then obviously the name of James L. Malone was sent to the floor, the full floor of the Senate. That is how we reached this point today.

This year, Mr. Malone personally sought and received a vote on his nomination to the position of Ambassador of Belize, despite the fact that he was told that there were insufficient votes to support his nomination.

He knew this ahead of time. And he still wanted a vote. Of course, we gave him a vote. And he lost.

We believe, as a matter of principle, that when the committee has acted with respect to an individual on several occasions as definitively as in the case of Mr. Malone, the matter should be considered resolved.

If this sets a precedent, go back 2 years ago and find an Ambassador maybe who had been nominated by one vote, where reconsideration was asked for, switch a vote, and recall an Ambassador based on this precedent.

To break with precedent and reopen a vote months later raises serious questions about the validity of this Committee's decisionmaking process and the credibility of our ambassadorial representation aboard.

Of course, it does not surprise me. Since I have been in this body, all kinds of mysterious things can happen even after you think you have won a vote, or even lost a vote. The credibility of our ambassadorial representation abroad has been impaired.

We cannot imagine that Mr. Malone could be a welcome or effective amabassador for the United States to Belize given the history of the Committee's deliberations.

For these reasons we cannot participate in a business meeting at which the nomination of James Malone is to be reconsidered. We recognize that this is an important decision, and it is one which we have made with great reluctance. We sincerely hope that we can reach agreement with you that this nomination will not be raised again in order to maintain our customary bipartisan cooperation in the expeditious disposition of pending Committee business.

(Mr. HUMPHREY assumed the chair.)

Mr. President, this letter was sent to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee on September 15 signed by myself, Senator PELL, Senator SARBANES, Senator DODD, Senator KERRY, Senator BIDEN, Senator CRANSTON, and Senator EAGLETON.

I might just take a moment at this point to review how we came to this position at 10 minutes after 6 on an evening when the Senate and the House are rushing headlong for adjournment before having conferences and meetings as a critique on the summit conference that took place recently.

And many farmers are gathering out in the midlands wondering why they have not heard the word "agriculture" used yet for anything that happened at the summit meeting when numerous requests were made of the administration to mention something to the Soviet Union, and Mikhail Gorbachev about agriculture and farming. But here we are, nevertheless, at 10 after 6.

Prior to my seeking the floor, the manager of the bill on the majority side indicated now we are going to find out who is holding up nominations. I do not think I have much of a reputation around this Chamber for holding up much of anything except at this particular time it is quite obvious that I am going to do what I can to hold up this nomination as long as God lets me stand on the floor here and continue to speak.

I do not think I am a fiend. I do not think I am the originator of taking hostage of Ambassadors that the administration wants to appoint during this administration. In fact, I might have learned it from my learned colleague as to how to do this.

But just for the record, let me say that there was a fair fight in the committee. That is what committees are for. That is why they have jurisdiction in particular areas. In the Foreign Relations Committee, James Malone got a fair shot. He got a fair vote. There was no arm twisting. There was no coercion, and he lost.

I have every bit of respect for my colleagues that voted opposite the way I did, as I would hope they have for me voting the way I did. But that is democracy. That is what our country is all about and that is what our Government is all about.

Unfortunately, around this place when you lost through the democratic process sometimes you can win through the parliamentary-constructed process. So that sort of gives us democracy on one hand and taking away majority rule on the other hand. I guess all these checks and balances are good because one can reflect and it slows up some legislation sometimes that might be faulty, that might be bad.

But I think in this instance the best interest of the country was served by the rejection of the nomination of Mr. Malone to be Ambassador to Belize, and so did a Member of the majority side, Senator MATHIAS. He agreed with us. Of course, there are eight Democrats and nine Republicans, and although we speak of our committee very courageously as being bipartisan, even on some occasions I have heard the chairman of the committee say we are not partisan but that we all act in unison, Senator MATHIAS was the only defection that allowed us, with our eight Democrats and there being nine Republicans, to not go forward with the nomination. It was the first time in history of the Foreign Relations Committee that a nomination had been denied in that manner.

If I recollect, I think Senator EVANS voted present at that time. So the nomination did not have enough votes to ratify its continuance to the full Senate.

Three or four months went by. It was all over. I had heard that my esteemed colleague, for whom I have a great deal of respect, and who is managing this for the majority side, had a hold on some ambassadorships. This was the first time I had heard that Senator HELMS had a hold on some ambassadorships. In fact, I have heard from the State Department that as a rule of thumb, generally Senator HELMS does have at any given time some ambassadorships that he is objecting to in order to get a hold taken off through our parliamentary procedure, for a minority group to succeed eventually in overcoming the objections of the majority.

This I accept. Those are the rules of the game around this place. I again respect Senator HELMS for that. He does a good job at it. He has won many battles and he has lost some, as we all do around here. You win some and you lose some.

But I do not think this nomination is a test on who takes hostages of Ambassadors or who holds up Ambassador appointments. I think we can all lay claim at one time or another in this body to doing a little bit of that. I have no objection to that happening if Senator HELMS has no objection to that happening. But evidently he does. I would concur with him, we should not take any hostages of ambassadorships and appointments. I think the State Department would even agree with that. I am sure it would make life for the administration a lot more simple.

But, again, here we are at a quarter after 6 and still talking about ambassadorships. After 3 or 4 months when we voted down the Malone confirmation, Senator MATHIAS comes to me and he says, "Senator, I hope you do not mind, but I am going to change my vote on the Malone nomination."

I said, "Well, certainly you are entitled to do that if you want."

He said, and I think the exact words he used were, "I have gone to the flesh market."

I said I had not heard that terminology. When he said he went to the flesh market, I said, "What does that mean?"

He said, "Well, that means that I traded the release of an ambassadorship that Senator HELMS has a hold on in order to change my vote so that the Malone nomination could go forward so Senator HELMS could take his hold off my nominee that I want to see as an Ambassador. That is called going to the flesh market, where you change one humanoid for another humanoid who happens to be up for an ambassadorship."

So 3 months after the fact, all of a sudden we are opening up the Malone nomination again, and sure enough, Senator MATHIAS switches his vote. Then it becomes 9 to 8 the other way and the Malone nomination is sent to the floor of the Senate. That is why it is here right now, for no other reason. It was not because ED ZORINSKY tried months ago to take ambassadorships hostage. I did not even know how you did it. I did not know why you did it. And I did not care why you did it. But I am finding out now that if you do it, you do not get what you want around this place.

So I guess what I am doing now is proper because I have seen everybody else in this place do this. Sometimes you are successful and sometimes you are not. But I certainly want to assure the American people that a Senator from Nebraska did not get elected to come back here on the 14th of October 1986 at a quarter after 6 when all normal people are home eating dinner standing up here talking about ambassadorship nominations and who took who and who is guilty or liable for ambassadorships being held up.

I thought we had decided this in committee. Actually, we had. We had a vote on it 3 months ago. Everybody forgot about it until somebody went to a flesh market and switched votes because they got a hostage released, an ambassadorship, so that brought me out of the bushes to come up here and try to put Malone back in the box, which is hard to do sometimes, and deny the confirmation of this nomination.

That is a brief explanation of who is doing what and why and how we got to where we are right now, and probably why it was pretty much along the lines of a partisan vote taken a few moments ago when I asked for the rollcall, the yeas and nays, on proceeding to consider the Malone nomination. We on our side felt that this had already been decided. On that side of the aisle, obviously, it is a Presidential nomination and certainly the party of the President has to stick up for the President and his nominations.

If you take this Senator's record on voting in support of nominations that the President sent here, I am sure you will find that, even though a Democrat and being on this side of the aisle, I have supported the President on numerous controversial nominations that he has made, as a matter of fact, Republican in nature, conservative in nature, but, nevertheless, I have supported his nominations on numerous occasions when some of my fellow colleagues on this side of the aisle may not have supported them.

I try to evaluate the individual, the character of an individual who is going to represent this country. I think we all take our term of advise and consent realistically and seriously.

□ 1820

I know I do. I just do not feel that Mr. Malone is fit to be confirmed as Ambassador to Belize. Nor do I think anyone in his right mind in the country of Belize, with the understanding that Mr. Malone has already been rejected by the United States Senate Foreign Relations Committee as being qualified to represent this country to Belize—I do not think they want him as an Ambassador down there. I think just reading the transcript of what I am saying right now might injure his acceptance in Belize and might cause further questions to my office with regard to what problems we have had with Mr. Malone, which I am about to go into for the rest of the evening.

Let me continue. Despite Senate rule 13, the majority members of the committee voted to report the nomination of James Malone more than 5 months after the committee voted against him, thereby acting contrary to Senate rule 26, which enjoins committees to conduct their business in a manner not inconsistent with the rules of the Senate.

In addition to acting in a manner inconsistent with the standing rules of the Senate, the majority members of the committee also ignored rule 4(b) of the rules of the Committee on Foreign Relations. Rule 4(b) specifically requires the presence of a member from each party for the transaction of business other than reporting such as the reconsideration of a vote taken earlier by the committee. It is argued that in this case, reconsideration was a necessary step prior to a vote to report, although I assume the chairman of the committee did not agree with this because Senator MATHIAS was allowed to switch his vote; then, by a vote of 9 to zero at a meeting that we did not attend, that was actually boycotted, the name was forwarded to the full Senate.

We do not accept the argument that the majority of the committee can do whatever it wishes whenever it wishes regardless of rules duly adopted by the committee and the Senate. The rules have been established and agreed to in order to protect the interests of each Member. The spirit and letter of these rules, in our view, should be observed. Unfortunately, that view is apparently not shared by the majority members of the committee—at least not in this particular case.

We think it is important to provide some background concerning the history of James Malone's earlier appearances before the committee and his performance as Assistant Secretary of State for Oceans and International Environmental and Scientific Affairs in order that it will be clear that our actions on this matter were in no way based upon partisan concerns but were governed by our firm belief that U.S. interests would be ill served should Mr. Malone be confirmed as a U.S. Ambassador. Let me point out that Mr. Malone's earlier committee appearances were controversial.

James Malone's nomination to the position of Ambassador to Belize is his third nomination to positions within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Foreign Relations. Before being nominated to this most recent position, he was nominated to two other positions within the Department of State, first as Assistant Secretary of State to the Bureau of Oceans and International Environmental and Scientific Affairs in the spring of 1981, and again, in May 1982, to the position of Ambassador at Large in connection with his designation as the President's special representative to the Law of the Sea Conference.

Both nominations proved controversial. In the case of the latter, the President withdrew the nomination on July 27, 1982, after it became clear that there were insufficient votes in committee to report the nomination of Mr. Malone favorably.

Mr. Malone remained as Assistant Secretary of OIES after his second nomination was withdrawn until he was replaced by John Negroponte in July 1985. In a effort to conciliate Mr. Negroponte's confirmation, the administration reportedly assured Senator HELMS that Mr. Malone would be given another position within the Department of State. However, it was not until December 13 that his nomination to a position as Ambassador to Belize was transmitted to the Senate.

Currently, he is a consultant to the State Department, awaiting the outcome of his nomination. The areas of controversy are as follows:

The following six issues arose during the committee's consideration of Mr. Malone's earlier nominations: insensitivity. This is not me inventing this and this is not a group of Democrats or Republicans or any specific group getting in a room together and plotting to assassinate someone's character, but strictly from observation of an individual, these are the issues that arose based on Mr. Malone's actions.

Insensitivity with respect to a potential conflict of interest and/or appearance of impropriety which might arise in carrying out his duties at OIES, particularly nuclear nonproliferation duties, in light of his representation of certain foreign nuclear utilities while in private law practice.

Violations of certain written commitments made to the Foreign Relations Committee as a condition of his first confirmation was another issue raised.

Mismanagement of the OIES Bureau as reported by the Inspector General's Office of the State Department. I do not know if the IG of the State Department is a Republican or Democrat and I do not care, but he is the one who raised the issue of mismanagement of the OIES Bureau. The Inspector General's Office of the State Department is the one that raised that issue.

Inadequate diplomatic preparation in connection with handling of the law-of-the-sea negotiations. I was not there to make that judgment either. Obviously, this became an issue during one of the confirmations also, which led to unsuccessful efforts to negotiate a successful Law of the Sea Treaty.

Questionable judgment and impropriety in conjunction with several consulting contracts and contract procedures, which in one case cost the U.S. Government almost $200,000 to pay for the services of a private consultant who served as Mr. Malone's personal assistant for law of the sea matters.

Now, if it cost the U.S. Government $200,000 to pay for the services of a private consultant, who had served as Mr. Malone's personal assistant, I would assume most people in this body would raise that issue.

Also, another issue raised is false statements under questioning by the Foreign Relations Committee in connection with his nomination to the position of Ambassador at Large, as the President's representative to the Law of the Sea Conference.

Mr. Malone first encountered difficulties in connection with his nomination as Assistant Secretary of OES. At that time concerns were raised about Mr. Malone's ability to carry out his nuclear nonproliferation duties, which would include ruling on specific export licenses and other matters related to foreign nuclear utilities in an impartial manner. In light of his representation of certain foreign nuclear utilities; Taiwan Power Co., the Kansai Electric Co., and Tokyo Electric Power Co., while in private law practice, and the ongoing representation of these clients by his former law firm, Doub and Muntzing, Mr. Malone's difficulties were compounded by his insensitivity to these concerns and his unwillingness to agree definitely to recusing himself from any involvement in matters which might arise at the Department of State in conjunction with them.

The following additional views of four members of the committee—Senators GLENN, SARBANES, ZORINSKY, and CRANSTON—were expressed at the time of this nomination outlining those difficulties, and these views are also contained in the printed report on the nomination of James L. Malone.

We regret that we cannot join in recommending the confirmation of James L. Malone as Assistant Secretary of State for Oceans and International Environment and Scientific Affairs.

In this position, Mr. Malone would be the senior Administration official with day-to-day responsibility for implementing United States nonproliferation policy, a subject of deep concern to the Committee and of profound importance to the national security.

As an attorney, Mr. Malone represented a number of foreign nuclear utilities and was a registered foreign agent for one of them.

I guess as a matter of public knowledge when you register as a foreign agent—and Mr. Malone obviously did represent a number of foreign utilities inasmuch as he was a registered foreign agent for one of them—it certainly takes the volition of an individual to register himself so obviously this is a factual statement.

He was associated with the firm of Doub and Muntzing, which represents a variety of foreign nuclear interests. Because Mr. Malone would be in a position to rule on U.S. nonproliferation policy in general, and on specific export licenses and other approvals affecting former clients, it is essential that he be committed to adhere scrupulously to requirements that attorneys in public service avoid any conflicts of interest, as well as appearances of impropriety.

I have heard that comment used with regard to members in the United States Senate.

In our view, Mr. Malone had failed, despite Committee efforts, to demonstrate this commitment.

Mr. Malone has acknowledged personally representing three foreign nuclear utility clients: Taiwan Power Company, a wholly owned subsidiary of the Taiwan Government; Tokyo Electric Power Company (TEPCO), a major Japanese electric utility; and Kansai Electric Power Company (Kansai) a second Japanese electric utility. From January 10, 1979, until December 2, 1980, Mr. Malone also served as a registered foreign agent for Taiwan Power Company. Each of these entities has in the past been the focus of major U.S. nonproliferation policy initiatives.

In November and December 1980, while still employed at Doub and Muntzing and representing the three clients mentioned above, Mr. Malone co-chaired the Reagan Transition Team on Nuclear Non-Proliferation Policy. The report of the transition team, dated December 18, 1980, contained the following specific policy recommendations:

There should be no concern about those industrialized nations with substantial and expanding commitments to nuclear power, e.g., Japan and the Federal Republic of Germany.

Requests for retransfer for reprocessing in the United Kingdom and France will be approved without linkage to other issues (i.e., without reference to criteria used by the Carter Administration which required a foreign utility to show, for example, that it was suffering from spent fuel congestion or that its reprocessing contract had been signed before the announcement of the new U.S. policy aimed at discouraging this activity.)

TEPCO and Kansai would be major beneficiaries of these proposed changes in U.S. policy.

Clearly, to avoid the appearance of professional impropriety, Mr. Malone should not have dealt with issues of concern to his clients on behalf of the incoming Administration. His demonstrated insensitivity to this problem leads some Members to conclude that it would be particularly important that this nominee be clear and precise as to how he would avoid future conflicts of interest and appearance of impropriety.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ZORINSKY. Mr. President, under the precedents of the Senate, I will be happy to yield to the Senator from Arizona, provided that I am accorded unanimous consent to be recognized, first, to resume when this question is again before the Senate—today, tomorrow, or any other day—and that the continuation of my remarks at that time will be viewed as an extension of my first speech and not as a second speech under the two-speech rule.

CONGRATULATING ELIE WIESEL ON BEING CHOSEN 1986 RECIPIENT OF THE NOBEL PEACE PRIZE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I have discussed with the distinguished minority leader a resolution which he and I will sponsor, along with other cosponsors, congratulating Elie Wiesel on being chosen the 1986 recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize. He was nominated for that award by myself and the distinguished minority leader months ago. Today, the Nobel Peace Prize Committee announced that he will be awarded its 1986 Peace Prize.

In recognition of this great honor being bestowed upon an American citizen, a man who deserves the recognition of the world for his contribution to mankind, I send the resolution to the desk, on behalf of myself, Senator BYRD, and other cosponsors, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 508) congratulating human rights activist Elie Wiesel on being chosen the 1986 recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize.

S. RES. 508

Whereas, Elie Wiesel lived through the horrors of the Nazi Holocaust, witnessing the persecution and death of family and friends; and

Whereas, having survived this despicable manifestation of man's inhumanity against man, he dedicated his life to insuring that no such travesty ever occur again by calling on men and women the world over "to never forget"; and

Whereas, through his writing, teaching, and activism, Elie Wiesel has fought relentlessly for the human rights of all individuals—regardless of their heritage or their beliefs, and

Whereas, Elie Wiesel, an American citizen, has been recognized for his work in advancing human rights, his contributions to literature and his leadership of the Holocaust Memorial Council by this country with the Congressional Medal of Achievement; and

Whereas, the Nobel Committee has selected Mr. Wiesel as its 1986 Peace Prize Winner, noting that he "has emerged as one of the most important spiritual leaders and guides in an age when violence, repression and racism continue to characterize the world;

Therefore, be it resolved, that the Senate offer sincerest approval of the Nobel Committee's choice which will allow the entire world to know of Elie Wiesel's contributions to an enduring peace and transmit to Mr. Wiesel its heartfelt congratulations for this historic and much deserved achievement.

The cosponsors of the resolution are Senators DOLE, BYRD, SIMON, D'AMATO, HAWKINS, METZENBAUM, BOSCHWITZ, GRAMM, HEINZ, HELMS, HUMPHREY, LAUTENBERG, MITCHELL, MOYNIHAN, PELL, QUAYLE, SARBANES, SASSER, and ZORINSKY.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am proud and happy to say that Mr. WIESEL, who is one of the world's most eloquent and forceful advocates of human rights, was nominated for this award by myself and the distinguished minority leader, Senator BYRD.

I have had the privilege of knowing and working with Elie for a number of years, on human rights issues, and as a member of the Holocaust Memorial Council. It is impossible to be with Elie for more than a few moments without recognizing his commitment to his fellow man—his total dedication to making this world more humane, more decent.

His own experience during the Nazi Holocaust was the catalyst for his crusade to force the world to remember its iniquities. Because, Wiesel believes, that our own humanity, our decency is always hanging in the balance, threatened by evils from within and from outside. And if we let down our guard, if we refrain from lending a helping hand to men and women the world over who simply seek the right to be free, then we could confront another, if different, Holocaust ourselves.

In its citation, the Nobel Committee said,

Elie Wiesel has emerged as one of the most important spiritual leaders and guides in an age when violence, repression and racism continue to characterize the world.

Mr. Wiesel is a messenger to mankind: his message is one of peace, atonement and human dignity. His belief that the forces fighting evil in the world can be victorious is a hard won belief.

But we cannot yet claim victory. And no one knows that better than Elie Wiesel. Receiving the Nobel Peace Prize will only spur him to continue his crusade to guarantee basic human rights and peace for men and women, whatever their race, color, or religion, wherever they may live.

I want to offer Elie my personal congratulations. I am proud to say I know him, and even prouder to call him my friend.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader for allowing me to be a cosponsor of this resolution commending human rights activist Elie Wiesel on being chosen the 1986 recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize. I think this is a very worthy choice.

I commend the Nobel Committee on its having made this selection. I think it is a selection that will meet with worldwide acclaim.

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, as a cosponsor, I rise to support the resolution now before the Senate commending Elie Wiesel for earning the Nobel Peace Prize. This is an award Mr. Wiesel clearly deserves. I know of no individual who is more a man of peace than Elie Wiesel. He knows firsthand the effects of man's inhumanity to his fellow man. As a holocaust survivor, he has gone on to remind all the people of the world that evil will prevail if good men do nothing. It is his single-minded determination to see that the world does not forget the horrors of the holocaust that makes him a man of peace. It is his eloquence that moves other people to share his vision of peace, a vision of peace with dignity for the individual. It is his faith that encourages us to continue to work for a truly humane world.

In my career in public service, I have rarely known a person of greater dedication or skill in advancing the cause of peace and human rights. Some have questioned the role of Elie Wiesel and those of us who urge the world not to forget the consequences of the Holocaust. They say let us forget these terrible days, and allow our wounds to heal. But we cannot, we must not forget, and no one has made this case with greater force than Elie Wiesel. Let us hear what Elie has to say about this in his own words:

Like it or not, the Event must and will dominate future events. Its centrality in the creative endeavors of our contemporaries remains undisputed. Philosophers and social scientists, psychologists and moralists, theologians and artists: all have termed it a watershed in the annals of mankind. What was comprehensible before Treblinka is comprehensible no longer. After Treblinka, man's ability to cope with his condition was shattered; he was pushed to his limits and beyond. Whatever has happened since must therefore be judged in the light of Treblinka. Forgetfulness is no solution.

Treblinka and Auschwitz, Majdanek and Belzec, Buchenwald and Ponar, these and other capitals of the Holocaust kingdom must therefore be remembered, and for several reasons.

First, we cannot grant the killers a posthumous victory. Not only did they humiliate and assassinate their victims, they wanted also to destroy their memory. They killed them twice, reducing them to ashes and then denying their deed. Not to remember the dead now would mean to become accomplices to their murderers.

Second, we cannot deny the victims the fulfillment of their last wish; their idée fixe to bear witness. What the merchant from Saloniki, the child from Lodz, the rabbi from Radzimin, the carpenter from Warsaw and the scribe from Vilna had in common was the passion, the compulsion to tell the tale—or to enable someone else to do so. Every ghetto had its historians, every deathcamp its chroniclers. Young and old, learned and unlearned, everybody kept diaries, wrote journals, composed poems and prayers. They wanted to remember and to be remembered. They wanted to defeat the enemy's conspiracy of silence, to communicate a spark of the fire that nearly consumed their generation, and, above all, to serve as warning to future generations. Instead of looking with contempt upon mankind that betrayed them, the victims dreamed of redeeming it with their own charred souls. Instead of despairing of man and his possible salvation, they put their faith in him. Defying all logic, all reason, they opted for humanity and chose to try, by means of their testimony, to save it from indifference that might result in the ultimate catastrophe, the nuclear one.

Third, we must remember for our own sake, for the sake of our own humanity. Indifference to the victims would result, inevitably, in indifference to ourselves, an indifference that would ultimately no longer be sin but, in the words of our Commissioner Bayard Rustin, "a terrifying curse" and its own punishment.

The most vital lesson to be drawn from the Holocaust era is that Auschwitz was possible because the enemy of the Jewish people and of mankind—and it is always the same enemy—succeeded in dividing, in separating, in splitting human society, nation against nation, Christian against Jew, young against old. And not enough people cared. In Germany and other occupied countries, most spectators chose not to interfere with the killers; in other lands, too, many persons chose to remain neutral. As a result, the killers killed, the victims died, and the world remained world.

I believe that each of us owes Elie Wiesel a debt of gratitude for his struggle to keep the memory of the holocaust alive. He is fighting for each of us and for our children so that we can live in a world free of the fear of such cruelty and inhumanity. We should not be lulled into thinking that it cannot happen again.

The Nobel Prize is a great achievement, but I can think of no one more qualified to receive it. My only regret, Mr. President, is that Elie had to wait so long to receive it.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise in strong support for the resolution offered by my good friend, the distinguished majority leader, congratulating Dr. Elie Wiesel as recipient of this year's Nobel Peace Prize. For the past 5 years it has been my pleasure to nominate Dr. Wiesel for this most esteemed award in recognition of his important work in the advancement of peace. Elie Wiesel is a respected scholar, lecturer, and writer who has dedicated his life to the pursuit of peace. As the citation issued by the Norwegian Nobel Committee said,

Wiesel is a messenger to mankind. His message is one of peace, atonement, and human dignity. His belief that the forces fighting evil in the world can be victorious is a hard-won belief.

Wiesel's commitment, which originated in the sufferings of the Jewish people, has been widened to embrace all repressed peoples and races.

In "Night," Wiesel's chronicle of the Holocaust, he reinforces our belief that genocide is the most heinous crime against humanity. Dr. Wiesel continually draws upon his personal experience, having survived Hitler's death camps. Wiesel and his family, along with the rest of the Jews in his city, were shipped off to Auschwitz. His mother and youngest sister perished there.

Through his writings, Wiesel has captured the brutality which nearly wiped out the Jews. His work is not a historical narrative, but conveys a powerful message for us today. As the Nobel Committee recognized,

Elie Wiesel has emerged as one of the most important spiritual leaders and guides in an age when violence, repression, and racism continue to characterize the world.

Mr. President, I applaud the selection of Dr. Elie Wiesel to receive the 1986 Nobel Peace Prize and congratulate this true champion of peace and human rights. I commend the majority leader for submitting this resolution, and I urge my colleagues to join me as a cosponsor.

THE AWARDING OF THE NOBEL PEACE PRIZE TO ELIE WIESEL

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the Nobel Peace Prize was awarded today to Elie Wiesel, an American, a New Yorker too, but truly a citizen of the world. The Nobel Committee said "Wiesel was a messenger to mankind; his message is one of peace, atonement, and human dignity."

As the survivor of Auschwitz and Buchenwald, Elie Wiesel translated his own personal confrontation with horror into a lifelong chronicle of man's violence against man, whether it was visited upon the Biafrans, Cambodians, or the Miskito Indians. He brought witness wherever human decency required it.

The Nobel Committee said:

Wiesel's commitment, which originated in the sufferings of the Jewish people, has been widened to embrace all repressed peoples and races.

So it has. Elie Wiesel was described once as the spiritual archivist of the Holocaust. Today in Oslo he was recognized a peacemaker for all the world. Mr. President, I ask that the Nobel Committee's citation honoring Elie Wiesel be printed in the RECORD:

The citation follows:

NOBEL COMMITTEE CITATION

The Norwegian Nobel Committee has resolved that the Nobel Peace Prize for 1986 should be awarded to the author, Elie Wiesel. It is the Committee's opinion that Elie Wiesel has emerged as one of the most important spiritual leaders and guides in an age when violence, repression and racism continue to characterize the world.

Wiesel is a messenger to mankind; his message is one of peace, atonement and human dignity. His belief that the forces fighting evil in the world can be victorious is a hard won belief. His message is based on his own personal experience of total humiliation and of the utter contempt for humanity shown in Hitler's death camps. The message is in the form of a testimony, repeated and deepened through the works of a great author.

Wiesel's commitment, which originated in the sufferings of the Jewish people, has been widened to embrace all repressed peoples and races.

The Norwegian Nobel Committee believes that Elie Wiesel, with his message and through his practical work in the cause of peace, is a convincing spokesman for the view of mankind and for the unlimited humanitarianism which are at all times necessary for a lasting and just peace.●

ELIE WIESEL RECEIVES THE NOBEL PEACE PRIZE

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I rise today to join in honoring Elie Wiesel, winner of the Nobel Peace Prize.

Elie Wiesel has dedicated his life to telling a story too awful to tell, a story that words cannot describe, because man's vocabulary does not include words as cruel and inhumane as man's actions. His works, both writings and lectures, attempt to explain the meaning of an abyss of fear and lost hope. As difficult as it is to tell, Elie Wiesel has made a gift of the holocaust story to mankind: to the survivors, to help them find a path away from this hell and celebrate the triumph of survival; to the rest of us, to keep the memory of the holocaust alive, so that mankind is not condemned to repeat its heinous past.

Elie Wiesel was born on September 30, 1928 in Sighet, Romania. He was a child of 12 when Romania was first occupied by the Nazis, but his days were then still filled with study of the Talmud and his family. It was not until April 1944 that the 10,000 Jews were deported from this Romanian town. Foreign Jews had been expelled from Sighet much earlier during the war. But, when one of them returned, Moche the Beadle, to tell a tale of digging their own graves and being slaughtered, with babies being thrown into the air and shot for target practice, the unanimous judgment of Elie Wiesel's community was that Moche had gone mad. No one heeded Moche the Beadle's warnings.

In spite of their disbelief of Nazi atrocities, the Jews of Sighet were sent to Auschwitz. On the train ride to Auschwitz, 80 people in a cattle car with no room to sit, scarcely room to breathe, a woman who had been separated from her family screamed each night of a fire no others could see. But on the fifth night her warnings, thought to be the ravings of a madwoman, became a reality and they all saw the flames and smelled the burning flesh of Auschwitz.

As soon as Elie Wiesel jumped from the cattle car, he was separated from his mother and his three sisters. But, he stayed by his father's side through months of hard labor at Auschwitz, on the "death march" of 42 miles to the train to Buchenwald, through the many selections where the decisions as to who would live and who would die were made savagely and arbitrarily. Elie Wiesel's father died of dysentery less than 3 months before Buchenwald was liberated. Father and son had given each other the courage and strength to endure. Theirs is a story of love and loyalty, in the face of a reality where love, courage, and loyalty meant nothing.

Elie Wiesel did not tell his story for 10 years after being liberated from Buchenwald. He studied at Sorbonne in Paris from 1947 until 1950. In 1956, he came to the United States. His writing is greatly influenced not only by religious writers but, also, the French influence is evident in his writings, particularly the existentialists. His writing demands that we go on living in the face of the absurdity of life. Elie Wiesel faced the human experience that is the most compelling evidence of the absurdity of life—the Holocaust, and yet he continues to go on living and telling his story.

Elie Wiesel has written 25 books on the Holocaust, religious themes, and moral responsibilities in today's world. He is the Andrew Mellon professor of the humanities at Boston University, he is the chairman of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council, the body that will create a national museum of the holocaust in Washington, DC. He continues to remind us, through his writing, teaching, and lectures, of the Holocaust to ensure that the story of millions of deaths is perpetuated. Already, some scholars are alleging that the Holocaust never occurred, or, if it did, it was greatly exaggerated. We do not want to believe that what we call civilization is just a thin veneer over a savage and barbaric nature. Elie Wiesel continues to tell his story, like Moche the Beadle and the "madwoman" on the train, in spite of the disbelief of his audiences, and the great pain and horrible memories it brings to him and others who know first hand the truth of his stories. He continues his fervent and solemn telling of this tale so that mankind is not condemned to repeat these inhumanities to man.

Mr. Wiesel has been the voice of our conscience, not only on the holocaust, but on the Beirut massacre, the starvation in Biafra, and the massacres in Cambodia and the Sudan, and the dangers of a nuclear holocaust.

I am a member of the U.S. Holocaust Commission which Elie Wiesel chairs, so I can personally attest to his dedication and courage in serving mankind and the brotherhood of nations by serving as a witness and testifying to the atrocities that were the holocaust.

For those of us who lost our families, and for mankind which lost humanity and dignity, conferring the Nobel Peace Prize on Elie Wiesel is a sign that we have learned the terrible lesson of the holocaust through his message: We must be eternally vigilant in preserving our morality or 6 million lives were lost in vain. Man has the capacity to destroy mankind. We must learn from our mistakes, and honor those willing to teach us.

I am very pleased the Nobel Committee has chosen to bestow this very fitting honor on Elie Wiesel.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the resolution? If not, the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

SCHEDULE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I have been asked about the program for the balance of the evening.

I think we may have had it, so far as any votes are concerned. I do not anticipate any votes. If there should be a vote, we will try to give Members advance notice of 30 or 40 minutes.

About 7 o'clock, we would like to bring up a noncontroversial bill, the Energy Appliance Efficiency Standards Act. I assume there will be an amendment offered to that measure by Senators GRAMM and NICKLES. That will be discussed at some length, and I understand that it might be withdrawn at that time.

If that is satisfactory to the Senator from Nebraska, we will then return to the nomination of Mr. Malone.

Mr. ZORINSKY. Would part of the unanimous-consent agreement be to return to the Malone nomination tomorrow, no sooner than 10 a.m.?

□ 1850

Mr. DOLE. Let me check that before making judgment on that.

Mr. ZORINSKY. I do not intend to be difficult, but if I am going to accommodate the body——

Mr. DOLE. I thought I would give the Senator a chance to get a bite to eat.

Mr. BYRD. If the distinguished majority leader will yield, we on our side are running the clearance on the bill which is alluded to. I think we have one more Senator to clear this with. As soon as we are able to do that if we could perhaps get to the measure so that Senators would know whether or not there is going to be a rollcall vote and if there is they can then go on home.

Mr. DOLE. I would not anticipate a rollcall vote on that measure. As far as I know there will be no rollcall vote demanded. I indicated we prefer not to have one on that particular legislation if we can avoid it.

Mr. BYRD. Can we say, then, if I may ask the majority leader, that there will be no more rollcall votes today?

Mr. DOLE. Unless we should suddenly come to some resolution to the Malone matter, I do not anticipate any more votes today. I regret to say that in a way because it means another day is gone and we still have the big five pieces of legislation not before us. We cannot fault anyone. They are not here.

Yes, there will be no more votes today.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the majority leader.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ZORINSKY. Mr. President, under the precedents of the Senate, I am happy to yield to the Senator from Rhode Island, providing that as the previous unanimous-consent request was made I not lose my right to the floor nor would it be considered a second speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PELL. I thank my colleague and friend from Nebraska.

THE ICELAND SUMMIT

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, in the several days since the Reykjavik summit, leaders on both sides have gone to some lengths to see cause for optimism.

I hope very much that the summit was not the failure it first appeared. Indeed, if it can give new purpose and direction to the talks in Geneva, then the final judgment should be positive.

Nonetheless, I deeply regret that the leaders failed to achieve an agreement when it seemed in grasp. As I said 3 years ago, after talks with our leaders and the Soviet leadership, agreement was necessary to control the strategic defense initiative if we were to have agreement to reduce strategic nuclear arms. The summit reinforces that judgment. We would be far wiser to keep the bird in hand—significant reductions in offensive strategic arms—in lieu of an ill-advised quest for two in the bush—SDI—which remains a most dubious proposition.

The question now is where to go from here. If the President is serious, he must decide how much he will give up on SDI. Is he willing, for instance, to stop insisting on the right to deploy SDI defenses and to accept controls on SDI during a mutually agreed period of adherence to the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty? If so, a deal should be possible.

Are the two leaders actually willing and able to force their bureaucracies to agree to reduce the strategic arsenals by about a half and move on subsequently toward elimination of weapons? If so, a deal should be possible.

After much talk, it seems that sharp reductions of nuclear weapons in Europe are possible in a way acceptable to our allies.

Finally, the door could be open to a new agreement on nuclear testing verification and strict controls on testing leading to a complete ban.

For all this to happen, the two sides must stop their public posturing. They must give clear instructions to their delegations in Geneva to get moving in a way that will put both the administration and the Soviets to the test. These negotiations are not new. Some of the talks date back to 1980. It is time for results.

Mr. President, it is foolish to talk about who blinked at the summit. The unanswered question is who was wearing blinders. The simple challenge is to put such thoughts behind us, take a fresh look at the possibilities, and move finally, but unswervingly, toward achievements which will matter to our generation and those who will follow.

I yield the floor.

NOMINATION OF JAMES L. MALONE TO BE AMBASSADOR TO BELIZE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ZORINSKY. Thank you, Mr. President.

Let me go back—since it appears I have adequate time left—and repeat the comments that Mr. Malone made. Going back to:

Unfortunately, in his appearances before the communications with this Committee, Mr. Malone has been less than forthcoming and has increased, rather than lessened, concerns. In his March 13 response to the standard Committee questionnaire, Mr. Malone stated:

"In keeping with the ethical standards applicable to Government officials and to the legal profession, I will disqualify myself from participating as a Government official in any aspect of a particular matter in which I have been personally involved in private practice on behalf of a client, as well as any substantially related matter involving or affecting such clients, or in which my prior firm, colleagues, or clients could appear to receive preferential treatment. I will also disqualify myself from all particular matters in which a major prior client has a direct financial interest. I anticipate that there will be very few, if any, instances which I will need to disqualify myself."

This is a statement made by Mr. Malone:

However, at his March 16 hearing, Mr. Malone was less precise in his assurances. He acknowledged his representation of three foreign clients. Mr. Malone was then asked by Senator Glenn whether he intended to disqualify himself from making recommendations to approve reprocessing by Japan and Taiwan. Although he agreed to disqualify himself "to the extent that there was any conflict in any way," Mr. Malone suggested that since he had not actively lobbied on behalf of these foreign clients, he would not have to disqualify himself from making decisions which directly affected them.

Now, this is in direct opposition to the statement he made previously to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Now he is not quite so sure that he should disqualify himself, and I would assume as any good businessman, and I felt I was a good businessman for 40 years, when there is a chance to make a profit, when there is a chance to make money for services rendered and it is legal, you do it, and I assume that—I do not know what amount of money was involved, but I am sure there was some economic relationship between the law office or his colleagues and these electric companies that generated some type of economic benefit to them, which must have indeed changed his enthusiasm for wanting to divorce himself from these types of matters.

Seeking a definitive clarification, Senator Glenn pursued this matter in a question for the record. Mr. Malone replied on March 23 as follows:

I have terminated all relationship with my former law firm and retain no interest of any kind with the firm or the companies mentioned in the answer to question 1. My functions with the firm in relation to these companies was only in a reporting capacity; however, as I have terminated my relationship with the firm there could not be any conflict or interest with respect to my participation in my future State Department activities.

The clear impression created by this answer was that because Mr. Malone had terminated his relationship with his firm, he had no intention of recusing himself from any matter affecting any of his former clients. But in the March 13 statement, Mr. Malone had appeared to state that he was indeed prepared to disqualify himself from a variety of matters affecting his former clients.

Faced with three apparently different answers on the issue of disqualification, Senator Glenn requested, in a March 31 letter to Mr. Malone, an unambiguous statement from him and an explanation of the inconsistencies. In his April 1st reply, Mr. Malone reiterated that he had terminated all relationship with his former law firm and went on to state:

□ 1900

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield the floor to the Senator from Ohio, since I am quoting from some of his concerns, for the purpose of debate, without losing my right to the floor and without this being considered the end of a speech for the purpose of a two-speech rule, and I ask unanimous consent that I be rerecognized at the conclusion of the Senator's remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAMM). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Nebraska very much.

Mr. President, it is not a pleasant task to rise and oppose anyone's nomination. I know what this means to the person individually, to families, and everyone concerned with it, including those who made the nomination.

But, Mr. President, I cannot, in good conscience, stand by, and so I must rise to express my opposition to the confirmation of James Malone as U.S. Ambassador to Belize. Now, as a general rule, Mr. President, I firmly believe a President is entitled to be served by officials of his own choosing. However, under our Constitution, the President, is not a prime minister with unlimited authority to do just exactly that, and under our system the Senate is given its own responsibility under our balance of powers with respect to the confirmation of Presidential nominees, and I and most Senators take that responsibility very, very seriously.

Mr. President, in considering nominees, I believe two criteria are basic. First is the nominee's qualification by background and experience to fill the post to which he or she has been nominated. Second is whether the nominee exhibits the honesty, integrity, and forthrightness necessary to do the job competently and do it well. Unfortunately, I have come to the conclusion that Mr. Malone falls short on both counts.

As the Senator from Nebraska has pointed out, this is not the first time I have opposed the nomination of Mr. Malone to a confirmable post in this administration. Clear back in 1981, as a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, I participated extensively in the hearings on Mr. Malone's nomination to be Assistant Secretary of State for Oceans, International Environmental and Scientific Affairs. The reason I had a particular interest in that appointment was because, in that position, Mr. Malone would be the senior administration official with day-to-day responsibility for implementing U.S. nonproliferation, nuclear nonproliferation policy, a subject of deep concern to me and of profound importance to national security. It was a matter I dealt with since I came to the Senate, a matter that I had worked on and was instrumental in getting passed the Nuclear Nonproliferation Act of 1978. So I was very interested in Mr. Malone's background and his views on the matters of nuclear policy and how he would carry those out.

As an attorney, prior to his nomination as Assistant Secretary, Mr. Malone represented a number of foreign nuclear utilities and was a registered foreign agent for one of them. That is fine. He was associated with the firm of Doub & Muntzing, which represented a variety of foreign nuclear interests. Because Mr. Malone would be in a position to rule on U.S. nonproliferation policy in general, and on specific export licenses and other approvals affecting former clients, it was essential as I saw it, that he be committed to adhere scrupulously to requirements that attorneys in public service avoid any conflicts of interest, as well as appearances of impropriety. These requirements were contained in the Department of State's own "Guidance to Attorneys Nominated to Positions Requiring the Advice and Consent of the Senate." That guidance states, and I quote,

> You should clearly disqualify yourself, for example, from participating in any aspect of a particular matter in which you have been personally involved in private practice on behalf of a client, as well as any substantially related matter involving or affecting such clients.

Without going into all the details, which are contained in the additional views section of the Foreign Relations Committee's report, which the distinguished Senator from Nebraska was quoting from, I believe, let me just say that Mr. Malone failed, despite repeated committee efforts, to demonstrate this commitment.

In 1981, I was deeply troubled by several aspects of the Malone nomination to be Assistant Secretary of State. I was concerned by the fact that he had made nonproliferation policy recommendations to an incoming administration favorable to foreign clients he was representing at the time. I was concerned by the fact that Mr. Malone's former practice and that of his firm was concentrated so heavily in serving foreign nuclear clients affected by Mr. Malone's prospective decisionmaking. I was concerned about his inconsistent statements as to the matters from which he would disqualify himself, despite repeated attempts by me and by the committee to clarify the matter. And finally I was concerned by the failure of the State Department to obtain the list of clients necessary to help ensure that potential problems did not arise.

Mr. President, beyond that, I believe that subsequent events proved these concerns to have been well founded. In May 1981, during confirmation hearings on Mr. Malone's nomination to be Ambassador at Large as the President's special representative to the Law of the Sea Conference, it was revealed that, despite assurances to recuse himself concerning matters related to his former clients, Mr. Malone actively lobbied the President of the U.S. Export-Import Bank to provide more favorable export credit terms to Taiwan Power, a former client, in connection with its purchase of a nuclear reactor from a U.S. company. To compound the problem, Mr. Malone told the Foreign Relations Committee that he had discussed specifically the matter of whether or not it was proper for him to make these contracts on behalf of Taiwan Power with Under Secretary Richard Kennedy. In a subsequent letter, he was forced to admit that he "did not discuss the propriety of my involvement in this matter with Under Secretary Kennedy or other senior officials."

That was under some pressure he made that admission.

Mr. President, I raise these issues and this amount of detail because I believe they apply directly to the honesty, integrity, and the forthrightness criteria I mentioned which I believe must be applied to all nominees.

In addition, I think the State Department's own evaluation of Mr. Malone is very important. In fact, this may be the most important part of the whole opposition to Mr. Malone, because he has been over there for a number of years, been over there for some time.

So, in addition, with respect to the first criteria of basic ability, it should be noted by the Senate that the Office of the Inspector General of the State Department, their own internal investigating source, their own inspector general that has independence to go any place in the Department and find out whatever they want, its inspector general issued a report highly critical of Mr. Malone's performance as Assistant Secretary from July 1981 to March 1982. In the State Department's own report, they questioned Mr. Malone's management, judgment, and diplomatic skills. Those are not my words, those are words from the State Department IG report.

Now turn that around. What qualifications should an ambassador have if not good management ability, good judgment, and good diplomatic skills?

For all these reasons I urge my colleagues to refuse to confirm the nomination of James Malone to be our Ambassador to Belize.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska controls the floor under a unanimous consent request.

The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. ZORINSKY. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. President, to continue with some of the background concerning previous appointments, I would like to continue reading from the committee report.

> Faced with three apparently different answers on the issue of disqualification, Senator Glenn requested, in a March 31 letter to Mr. Malone, an unambiguous statement from him and an explanation of the inconsistencies. In his April 1st reply, Mr. Malone reiterated that he had terminated all relationship with his former law firm and went to state:
> I would expect to seek official guidance in any case which might be seen as falling within the general disqualification policy provided. For example, I may determine that it is appropriate to disqualify myself from ruling on export licenses and reprocessing requests, as well as requests for permission to transfer U.S. origin spent fuel from Japan to the U.K. or France, for the above three companies for a period of time, as you suggest.
> Mr. Malone's continued unwillingness to be precise and categorical raises still further questions as to his intentions.
> Significantly, Mr. Malone's April 1 statement was at odds with the State Department's guidance to attorneys in Mr. Malone's situation. The State Department guidance states that:
> You should clearly disqualify yourself, for example, from participating in any aspect of a particular matter in which you have been personally involved in private practice on behalf of a client, as well as any substantially related matter involving or affecting such clients. You should also disqualify yourself from all particular matters in which, because of the involvement or interests of your prior firm, colleagues or clients, your participation would give rise to an actual or apparent conflict of appearance of impropriety. Examples of such matters include those in which a major prior client has a direct financial interest as well as those in which your prior firm or colleagues could appear to receive preferential treatment.

I realize all of my colleagues are aware of these type of occurrences. We have gone through numerous situations as to implied wrongdoings. Members of this body are frequently painted with a broad brush. If one, for example, is found to be questionable, all are found to be questionable. And for that very reason the State Department's guidance also states that examples of such matters include those that the clients or colleagues could appear to receive preferential treatment. It uses the words "could appear"; not necessarily that they would receive those preferential treatments.

As of April 1, it appeared that Mr. Malone was still holding open the possibility that he would rule on export licenses and reprocessing requests involving his former clients even though, in the words of the State Department guidelines, these would be matters that were "substantially related" to those in which he formerly gave advice to these clients and in which these clients would most definitely have a "direct financial interest." These uncertainties led the Committee to seek further clarification before voting on Mr. Malone's nomination.

In an April 2 letter to Chairman Percy—

Who was the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee at that time—

Mr. Malone repeated his response to the Committee questionnaire. However, this statement still varied from State Department guidance, particularly with regard to Mr. Malone's disqualification from matters in which the appearance of preferential treatment for his former firm or colleagues might arise. At a Committee meeting that afternoon, State Department attorneys were unable to give a clear answer to the question of whether Mr. Malone would or should disqualify himself from matters involving his prior clients in Taiwan and Japan as well as other clients of his former firm.

On April 3, Mr. Malone wrote Senator Glenn still another letter which finally provided clarification as to his intended actions concerning those clients to whom he had formerly rendered services:

"I will disqualify myself from ruling on export licenses and reprocessing requests for Taiwan Power Company, Tokyo Electric Power Company, and Kansai Electric Power Company and from ruling on all substantially related matters involving such clients (at the very least, such substantially related matters would include the transfer of U.S.-origin spent fuel from Japan to the U.K. and France)."

However, as the State Department guidelines make clear, any foreign nuclear client of his former firm could present Malone with a potential appearance of impropriety in his official duties. Nonetheless, Mr. Malone has declined to supply the Committee, or even the Legal Advisor of the State Department, with any listing of those foreign nuclear clients of his former firm known to him. Thus, the State Department's standards on appearance of impropriety will necessarily be self-policing, since without the client listing, the Department cannot ensure that Mr. Malone complies with the terms of this official guidance.

On May 4, Mr. Malone sent a final letter to the Committee restating his pledge to adhere to the State Department guidance and offering specific assurances.

Evidently, now it is becoming a matter of degrees as to his volition in complying with the instructions and guidelines laid down by the State Department.

It is instructive to compare Mr. Malone's earlier statements with his final position. In his April 1 letter Mr. Malone stated only that, "I may determine that it is appropriate to disqualify myself from ruling on export licenses and reprocessing requests, as well as requests for permission to transfer U.S.-origin spent fuel from Japan to the U.K. or France, for the above three companies for a period of time. . . ." In his letter of April 2, moreover, he stated, "In summary, I believe that there is no legal bar to my handling almost all matters which will be under my cognizance as a government official. . . ." In contrast, Mr. Malone now recognizes that the guidance requires much more and has agreed expressly to disqualify himself from ruling on:

Export licenses and reprocessing requests for Japan's two principal nuclear utilities, TEPCO and Kansai;

Export licenses and reprocessing requests for Taiwan's national utility, Taiwan Power Company;

Export licenses and reprocessing requests for General Atomic Company, the principal United States exporter of research reactors and fuel. As of March 31, General Atomic's export licenses were pending for reactor or fuel exports to Mexico, Taiwan, Bangladesh, Malaysia, Morocco, Indonesia and Rumania. (Except in the case of Taiwan and Mexico, General Atomic exports comprise virtually all U.S. nuclear exports to these countries.)

A major policy issue involving Japan, i.e., generic U.S. policy on approving transfer of spent U.S.-origin nuclear fuel from that country to the U.K. or France; and

Any other policy decision whose resolution, in effect, would determine the outcome of a licensing or reprocessing approval decision from which he had disqualified himself.

These clarifications resolve many issues; however, unless the department has the names of the foreign nuclear clients of Mr. Malone's former firm (other than those Mr. Malone personally represented), it would be impossible to verify Mr. Malone's compliance with the Department's stated standards.

Acting Legal Advisor James Michel states in his May 4 letter to Chairman Percy that such information has never been requested of any nominee and that there is "no reason why such a precedent setting condition should be imposed on Mr. Malone." However, State Department requirements for nominees in Mr. Malone's position do necessitate the disclosure of the names of at least some prior clients—certainly those for whom he rendered services personally. Such disclosures are necessary in order to comply with Ethics in Government act filing requirements. Experts differ—as they did in this case—on the degree to which the lawyers' Code of Professional Responsibility restricts disclosures of client identities. Significantly, Mr. Malone in all his correspondence has never suggested that disclosure of Doub and Muntzing's foreign nuclear clients would be violation of professional ethics and he has never shown any reluctance to divulge the names of his own clients, even though they remain clients with his former firm.

In conclusion, we remain deeply troubled by several aspects of Mr. Malone's nomination:

His having made non-proliferation policy recommendations to an incoming Administration favorable to foreign clients he was representing at the time;

The fact that Mr. Malone's former practice and that of his firm was concentrated so heavily in serving foreign nuclear clients affected by Mr. Malone's prospective decision-making, highlighting the possibility or appearance of preferential treatment;

His inconsistent statements as to the matters from which he would disqualify himself, despite repeated attempts by the Committee to clarify the matter; and

The failure of the State Department to obtain the list of clients necessary to help ensure that potential problems do not arise.

Given the record of inconsistencies, remaining doubts, and the prospects for future controversy, we regret that we cannot support the nomination of James Malone for Assistant Secretary of State.

That was signed by JOHN GLENN, PAUL S. SARBANES, EDWARD ZORINSKY, and ALAN CRANSTON.

I concur with the views expressed by Senator GLENN and other members of the minority.

This is taken from Senator ALAN CRANSTON'S additional views.

I concur with the views expressed by Senator Glenn and other members of the minority.

My concern about this particular nomination goes beyond these points, though, I believe that Mr. Malone has already demonstrated his insensitivity to conflict of interest issues by his performance during the Reagan Administration transition. At this time, he authorized the transition team report calling for the gutting of nonproliferation restriction on exports to foreign countries and foreign utilities on whose payroll he remained.

I believe this was a serious impropriety which, in itself, should disqualify Mr. Malone from consideration for this post.

I am further troubled by the prospect of having an individual who has represented foreign commercial interests professionally placed in the key position for weighing crucial U.S. security interests against these same foreign commercial interests. Inevitably these foreign interests will be viewed with considerable sympathy in Mr. Malone's development and execution of general nonproliferation policy, even if the nominee is barred from participating in specific license applications of former foreign clients. Thus I would conclude that for any genuine assurance that conflicts of interest will not arise, Mr. Malone would have to be barred from participation in any nonproliferation policymaking. The only way to accomplish this end, short of removal of nonproliferation responsibilities from the Oceans, International Environment and Scientific Affairs Bureau, is to oppose Mr. Malone's confirmation.

Ultimately Mr. Malone provided written promises to the committee that convinced a majority of the members to support the nomination. (Malone was reported favorably by a vote of 10-5; Senators Biden, Glenn, Sarbanes, Zorinsky, and Cranston voted in the negative.) In a May 4, 1981 letter to the chairman, Mr. Malone assured the committee that he would:

"Accept without qualification the obligation not to participate in any particular matter which might result in, or given the appearance of, a conflict of interest, giving preferential treatment to any person, a loss of independence or impartiality, or which would otherwise adversely affect the confidence of the public in the integrity of the government;"

And that he would:

"Disqualify myself from all particular matters in which, because of the involvement or interests of my prior firm, colleagues or clients, my participation would give rise to an actual or apparent conflict. . . . Examples of such matters include those in which a major prior client has a direct financial interest. . . ."

In addition to these general commitments, Mr. Malone made additional specific commitments in this letter concerning the above named utility companies. The full text of that letter follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, DC, May 4, 1981.

Hon. CHARLES H. PERCY,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR PERCY: I wish to take this occasion to reiterate my intent to comply fully with all applicable laws, regulations and State Department guidelines concerning my disqualification, due to my prior private practice of law, from considering matters as a government official.

Specifically, I accept without qualification the obligations not to participate in any particular matter which might result in, or give the appearance of, a conflict of interest, giving preferential treatment to any person, a loss of independence or impartiality, or which would otherwise adversely affect the confidence of the public in the integrity of the government.

I will disqualify myself, for example, from participating in any aspect of a particular matter in which I have been personally involved in private practice on behalf of a client, as well as any substantially related matter involving or affecting such clients. I will also disqualify myself from all particular matters in which, because of the involvement or interests of my prior firm, colleagues or clients, my participation would give rise to an actual or apparent conflict or appearance of impropriety. Examples of such matters include those in which a major prior client has a direct financial interest, as well as those in which my prior firm or colleagues could appear to receive preferential treatment.

I will also be subject to the ethical standards of the professional Code of Ethics of the bar association or associations of which I am a member, which provide additional guidance for attorneys entering the Government from private practice.

Because of certain questions which have arisen as to the interpretation of the Departmental guidance with respect to avoiding even the appearance of impropriety, I am further prepared to elaborate upon these standards by making the following specific assurances to the Committee:

(1) I will disqualify myself from ruling on export licenses and reprocessing requests for Taiwan Power Company, Tokyo Electric Power Company, Kansai Electric Power Company, and General Atomic Company, and from ruling on all substantially related matters involving any of those firms (including such substantially related matters as the transfer of U.S.-origin spent fuel from Japan to the U.K. and France);

(2) I will disqualify myself from participating in any other specific decisions which would be tantamount to ruling upon the particular matters from which I have agreed to disqualify myself. This does not necessarily mean that I would not participate in the development of country by country policy.

By disqualification I mean that I will not consider the matter and will instead, in writing, disclose pertinent facts to the appropriate official within the Department and instruct, in writing, my Deputy or other senior subordinate to prepare the necessary materials for decision without advising me anything about the case or seeking my advice or decision. This will be a matter of record in the Department of State.

Sincerely,

JAMES L. MALONE,
Assistant Secretary of State for Oceans, International Environmental and Scientific Affairs-Designate.

The following deals with the nominations to the position of Ambassador at Large, which was withdrawn.

NOMINATION TO THE POSITION OF AMBASSADOR AT LARGE WITHDRAWN

In the course of his May 13, 1981 confirmation hearing to the position of Ambassador at Large as the President's Special Representative to Law of the Sea Conference it was revealed that, despite assurances to recuse himself concerning matters related to his former clients, including Taiwan Power Company, Mr. Malone had actively lobbied the President of the U.S. Export Import Bank to provide more favorable export credit terms to Taiwan Power in connection with its purchase of a nuclear reactor from a U.S. company.

I personally, as an individual who supports nuclear power generating capacity, applaud the fact that someone was concerned about financing some purchases of nuclear power generators and reactors from a U.S. company. Better a United States company than a French company or a competitive company from another country. But Mr. Malone should not be the one to have done that because of his past and implied association with those firms.

Mr. Malone's veracity was called into question when under questioning he attempted to justify his involvement in the Taiwan issue, stating that he had consulted with his superior, Under Secretary of State Richard Kennedy, who had approved his involvement in this matter despite Mr. Malone's past relationship with the utility and his commitments to the committee. In a May 21, 1982 letter to the chairman, Mr. Malone subsequently admitted that he had never discussed the propriety of his involvement with Under Secretary Kennedy: "I did not discuss the propriety of my involvement in this matter with Under Secretary Kennedy or other senior officials." Below are the excerpts from the relevant portion of the May 13th transcript of the hearing, and Mr. Malone's "clarifying" letter.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you consult with anyone at a higher level than yourself at the State Department on it, seek counsel or advice on it?

Mr. MALONE. I certainly discussed it with other people in the State Department who were responsible for nuclear and nonproliferation matters that were senior to me, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. As to whether or not it was proper for you to make the contacts that you did about Taiwan Power?

Mr. MALONE. Yes. There was no question raised with me that the contacts that I made, as to the propriety.

The CHAIRMAN. Who were the individuals that you consulted with?

Mr. MALONE. Well, I certainly discussed this with Secretary Kennedy.

The CHAIRMAN. You did, with the Secretary?

Mr. MALONE. Yes, and he has been involved in this, as I believe you are aware, as well.

The CHAIRMAN. He told you to go right ahead, that it presented no problem? He knew the background, did he? Was he familiar with the background?

Mr. MALONE. Yes.

Obviously indicating that he knew the background and he was familiar with the background and told him to go right ahead.

Now, the following is a letter to Charles H. Percy, the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, from the Department of State, Bureau of Oceans and International Developmental and Scientific Affairs, dated Washington, DC., May 21, 1982.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN. I appreciated very much the opportunity to testify before your Committee on May 13. After reviewing the transcript, I would like to offer the following to assure that the record is clear.

First, in an exchange with you regarding my role in the Taiwan Power Co. Ex-Im Bank issue, I answered a question by saying I consulted with other senior officials in the State Department, including Under Secretary Kennedy, on my involvement in the export financing question relating to the possible U.S. reactor sales to the utility. I wish to make clear that these discussions involved the substantive issues concerning non-proliferation policy, the U.S. non-proliferation and trade interests in obtaining the contract, and the relevance of the financing terms to these policy interests. I did not discuss the propriety of my involvement in this matter with Under Secretary Kennedy or other senior officials. I had provided written notice to officials of the Department setting forth my undertakings to the Committee regarding the specifics of my disqualifications. A copy of that memorandum is enclosed. It was also my understanding that a number of officials involved in non-proliferation matters were generally familiar with the scope of my disqualification undertakings that were developed in the confirmation process in 1981.

Second, when I became involved in the inter-agency effort to secure more favorable Ex-Im Bank financing terms to support U.S. non-proliferation policy, the Office of the Legal Adviser indicated to me that I should consider my May 4 letter to the Committee. They indicated that this was a matter for my judgment. Subsequently, the Office of the Legal Adviser advised me that there was a reasonable basis for me to have concluded that my involvement in these efforts to advance U.S. non-proliferation policy did not violate any of the disqualification pledges in my May 4 letter to the Committee.

I would like to add a clarification for the hearing record on the question of my registration under the Foreign Agent Registration Act. I refer to your statement during my confirmation hearing last year when you pointed out for the record that your staff had verified from the Department of Justice that I had actually terminated my relationship with Taiwan Power Co. on October 1, 1979, although due to an "administrative oversight" the Justice Department did not record this until December 1980.

Also, in connection with my colloquy with Senator Pell near the end of the hearing, I have been authorized by the Department to inform the Committee that in this case no information will be withheld from the Committee because of any attorney-client privilege.

Sincerely,

JAMES L. MALONE.

Mr. Malone's flagrant disregard for his commitment to the committee not to involve himself in any matter involving a former client, coupled with his subsequent unsuccessful attempt to "clarify" his testimony concerning that involvement, resulted in the withdrawal of his nomination by the President in the face of certain defeat in the committee.

(Mr. HECHT assumed the chair.)

Mr. ZORINSKY. I thought that was pretty good judgment on behalf of the President. First, when you have a transcript of a record that says: "Who were the individuals that you consulted?" regarding the propriety of what you are doing, Mr. Malone answered, "Well, I certainly discussed this with Secretary Kennedy."

Then Chairman Percy said, "You did? With the Secretary?"

Mr. Malone said, "Yes, and he has been involved in this as I believe you are aware, as well."

□ 1950

The chairman, Mr. Percy, then said: "He told you to go right ahead, that it presented no problem? He knew the background, did he? Was he familiar with the background?"

Mr. Malone provided the answer: "Yes."

He was familiar with the background and he knew the background, and it presented no problem.

Yet, in a clarifying letter, Mr. Malone indicates: "I did not discuss the propriety of my involvement in this matter with Under Secretary Kennedy or other senior officials."

You cannot have it both ways. Either the man did or he did not. I would accept either answer, except that it does raise in my mind the problem of credibility and validity, as to whether he did or did not, inasmuch as he contradicts himself.

As we all know in this body, a lot of times it is not what you did nor did not do; it is what it appeared that you did or appeared that you did not do that makes a big difference with regard to how we are judged.

I always feel that even though we are scrutinized and we are looked at by the public, as well we should be, we represent the people who sent us here; we are an extension of the will of the people from our States equally in the U.S. Senate, which has two Senators from each State. If we went around appearing to be criminals or appearing to conduct deals behind doors or appearing to do things not in the best interests of this country, I think it would certainly be within the rights of the voters, the citizens of this Nation, to recall us, impeach us, or to vote us out of office on election day.

That is why appearance is so important to those of us who hold high office, and certainly I would classify a nomination of the President to a high office, also in the instance of James Malone to an ambassadorship.

Mr. Malone's flagrant disregard for his commitment to the committee not to involve himself in any matter involving a foreign client, coupled with his subsequent unsuccessful attempt to clarify his testimony concerning that involvement resulted in the withdrawal of this nomination, as I indicated, by the President, in the face of certain defeat in the committee.

Another issue concerning poor management of OES documented by the inspector general's report: In addition to the above issues, Mr. Malone's managerial abilities, judgment, and diplomatic skills were called into question by a highly critical report. This was not a partisan report, to the best of my knowledge. It was just a report, an internal report, by the Office of the Inspector General. I do not even know the name of that individual, and I do not know his party affiliation, and I assume that he is attempting to do his job to the best of his ability, as we are trying to do our jobs to the best of our ability.

The inspector general reviewed Mr. Malone's handling of his responsibilities as head of OES from July 1981 to March 1982. The inspector general's office found that management has been inadequate and that Mr. Malone showed questionable judgment and impropriety in connection with the contract for the personal services of Lee Mortimer, who Mr. Malone brought in for less than a year as a personal assistant for LOS matters—laws of the sea matters—at a cost of nearly $200,000.

The inspector general's report also called into question Mr. Malone's diplomatic skills, noting that only perfunctory efforts were made in connection with diplomatic efforts with our allies prior to the last session of the law of the sea negotiations, which would be needed if our positions were to prosper at the LOS conference.

In conclusion, Mr. Malone has been given ample opportunity to allay the concerns we share about his actions, his abilities, and his judgment. He has failed to do so, and therefore we believe that the evidence overwhelmingly dictates that James L. Malone should not be given the honor and privilege of being confirmed as Ambassador to Belize by the U.S. Senate, and we would hope that a majority of the Members of the Senate would concur with our conclusion.

I would like to go on and cite the appendix of the report because I think it is an important part of the record. Prior to that, I would like to read into the RECORD some of the written questions that I submitted to Mr. Malone and the answers to those questions, because they were not done in public at the hearings in the Foreign Relations Committee.

This is from a letter dated February 26 from the State Department:

Dear Mr. Chairman:

Following the February 19 nomination hearing of James L. Malone to be ambassador to Belize, additional questions for the record were submitted by Senator Zorinsky. Please find enclosed the answers to those questions.

Sincerely,

JAMES W. DYER,
Acting Assistant Secretary, Legislative and Intergovernmental Affairs.

The first question:

In your response to a question from Senator Kerry concerning your contacts with the U.S. Export-Import Bank, concerning an Exim loan of the Taiwan Power Co., you stated that the Exim Bank loan, as I said, did involve the Taiwan Power Co. very directly. Who was to be the recipient of this loan? What was the loan to be used for? Did Taiwan Power Co. stand to benefit directly from the Exim Bank loan under discussion? Why, then, did you characterize the involvement of Taiwan Power Co. in this matter as very indirect?

My answer to Senator Kerry's question should be understood in the context in which the Eximbank issue arose.

This is the answer.

As the Assistant Secretary of State of OES, I was given major responsibility for the implementation of U.S. non-proliferation and nuclear export policies. A critical element of that policy, consistent through several administrations, has been to exert a strong non-proliferation influence on Taiwan by promoting United States, as opposed to foreign suppliers, for nuclear facilities there.

This consideration was of fundamental importance and, in my view, of direct concern to me as Assistant Secretary. From October 1981 to February 1982, I participated in Administration efforts to convince the Eximbank to offer better financial terms to Taiwan Power Company in a proposed purchase of a nuclear reactor from U.S. vendors. The directly intended effect of this effort was to further critical non-proliferation objectives of the United States and to promote the ability of the U.S. nuclear industry to compete in the international market on a fair basis with heavily subsidized foreign (in this instance, French) firms.

The benefit to Taiwan Power Co., which in any case would have been negligible given the extremely favorable terms already offered by the Government of France for the sale of a French reactor, was of no relevance to the policy questions involved. This is why I characterized the involvement of Taiwan Power Co. in this matter as "very indirect" when I should perhaps have said that the potential benefits for it were inconsequential.

Question. In response to a question by Senator Kerry concerning whether you had "engaged in lobbying" the president of Eximbank with regard to the terms of a loan under consideration by the bank for Taiwan Power Company, you stated that "I participated . . . as a member of the Administration team that was involved in this."

Did you personally discuss the question of loan terms for Taiwan Power Company with the President of Exim, either in person or by telephone? On how many occasions?

Were these contacts made on your own initiative or at the explicit directions of your superior or superiors? And please give their names.

Did you recommend that the terms of the loan be made more favorable than the terms that were then under consideration by Eximbank?

Mr. Malone's response was as follows:

Again, my response to this question should be understood in the context in which the issue arose.

From October 1981 through February 1982 I participated with other senior State Department officials, including among others, the then Under Secretary for Management and the Assistant Secretaries for East Asian and Pacific Affairs and Economic and Business Affairs, in an effort to secure favorable Eximbank financing terms for the export of a nuclear reactor to Taiwan. It was clear to us that France had already offered very favorable terms for the sale of a French reactor, and that unless more favorable terms were offered by the Eximbank than originally proposed, a U.S. supplier would have no chance to be awarded the contract.

To the best of my recollection, I personally spoke with Mr. Draper, the President of the Eximbank on two separate occasions on this issue. This was done on the strong recommendation of OES nuclear division senior staff and department officials concerned with non-proliferation policy.

I did, indeed, together with the Assistant Secretary for Economic and Business Affairs, recommended that the terms of the loan be made more favorable than the terms that were under consideration by the Eximbank—though not, I might add, as favorable as those originally proposed by the Assistant Secretary for East Asian and Pacific Affairs; and not nearly as favorable as the terms already offered by France. I thought it was extremely important to overall U.S. non-proliferation policy to have the reactor purchased from the United States and under U.S control. Sale of the U.S. reactor would continue the central role of the United States in the Taiwan nuclear program.

Question. You stated that you decided to send the May 21, 1982 letter to Chairman Percy concerning your appearance before the committee on May 13th after reviewing the transcript, in order to ensure that your answer had not been "misinterpreted" with respect to whether or not you had specifically discussed the propriety of your involvement in the Exim matter with then Under Secretary Kennedy.

Prior to your decision to write this letter did you seek to edit or alter the transcript of the May 13 hearing, which was sent to you by the committee, so as to alter the nature of the exchange between Senator Percy and yourself on this subject? Were you then told that this could not be done? By whom? Is this what led you to write the letter of "clarification"?

Answer. During the May 13, 1982 hearing, I did testify in good faith that I had consulted with other senior State Department officials, including Under Secretary Kennedy regarding the Taiwan Power Co. case. That testimony was, indeed, true.

However, upon reviewing the transcript—which, we were told, was not to be printed and was only sent to us by the Committee as a courtesy copy—I became aware of a potential ambiguity. In order to correct any misunderstanding I then wrote to Chairman Percy to make it completely clear that these discussions focused on the substantive issues in the case and not specifically on the question of my recusal.

To the best of my recollection, a colleague may have suggested that, since the hearing was not to be printed and was only an information copy, it might be appropriate to simply correct the transcript and send it to the committee for its internal use. I decided, however, that it would be more appropriate to write to the chariman directly to be absolutely sure that the committee was not misled. I regret that the chairman misinterpreted this and subsequently suggested after receiving my letter that I had intentionally misled the committee in my testimony. I certainly did not intend to do so and sincerely regret it if I gave that impression to any member of the committee.

Question. Do you believe that it was reasonable to expect members of the committee to assume that you would not involve yourself in any matter having to do with a former client of yours or that of your law firm's as Assistant Secretary of OES, in light of the controversy which surrounded the issue of potential conflict of interest during your confirmation.

Question. With whom did you consult before involving yourself in the Taiwan Power Company/U.S. Export-Import Bank matter, concerning the propriety of your involvement in light of your written commitments to the committee? What did this person or persons advise?

Question. Do you believe you exercised good judgment with respect to your involvement in the Taiwan Power Company/Exim Bank matter? Would you make the same decision again?

Answer. I must respectfully suggest that such a sweeping, general recusal would have rendered me incapable of fulfilling my non-proliferation responsibilities as Assistant Secretary. This is precisely why I insisted on a more appropriate and narrow recusal during my 1981 confirmation which was accepted by the majority of the committee and explained in detail in the committee report (Exec. Rept. 97-9) and Supplemental material (Exec. Rept. 97-11).

Answer. In essence, this included a specific commitment to disqualify myself from export license and reprocessing requests for Taiwan Power Company and from ruling on all substantially related matters as well as a general disqualification from "all particular matters in which, because of the involvement or interests of my prior firm, colleagues or clients, my participation would give rise to actual or apparent conflict or appearance of impropriety."

Answer. When I became involved in the inter-agency effort to secure more favorable Eximbank financing terms to support U.S. non-proliferation policy, the Office of the Legal Adviser indicated to me that I should consider my May 4 letter to the committee. They indicated that this was a matter for my judgment.

Answer. I decided that disqualification was neither necessary nor appropriate in these circumstances for the following reasons:

Taiwan Power Company was not a major prior client of my firm and was never a personal client of mine;

The specific commitments I made pertaining to Taiwan Power not address Exim financing, a subject on which my former firm had never represented Taiwan Power;

The financial interests of Taiwan Power were best served by the French offer. The effort to obtain terms for a U.S. supplier was not intended to surpass or even to match the French terms. Therefore, it was apparent that the beneficiaries of my efforts were U.S. commercial interests and non-proliferation policy;

I had not originated the preference for U.S. suppliers to Taiwan. This was established as part of U.S. non-proliferation policy long before I took office;

I might interject, departing from the transcript at this particular time, that, as I stated before in my statement, I certainly support American-manufactured reactors over French reactors over German reactors, over any foreign-manufactured reactors. I support American industry and production. Why not us make a sale rather than somebody else?

But, again, I must say it was rather unusual in this instance, for the one involved the deepest and should be taking the position of offering the least suspicion with regard to his position in office, to make this recommendation under these circumstances.

We have huge divisions and departments in Government that could certainly make offers to these companies purchasing nuclear reactors, as to longer credit terms or to better financing or to lesser price, more competitive price than competitive suppliers or nations or countries.

What I am saying, I guess, is Mr. Malone certainly could not have been the only American out of 240 million Americans in a position to try to sell American, in order to avoid Mr. Malone placing himself in a position of suspect in attempting to gain an economic motive for a former, current, present or future client or one that was dealing with former colleagues which he indicated he would not do.

Another area of concern with myself, since I have been involved in building nuclear powerplants, is the fact that he indicates that quite obviously the beneficiaries of his efforts would certainly be availed of commercial interests in nonproliferation policy not economic gain or would not stand to gain economically or monetarily from his involvement or attempt to attain or obtain this contract for that company because there is no money in it, there is no profit in it. The French were selling so cheaply that no one could make any money on this.

Well, let me say this to you: As a participant in the building of nuclear powerplants, I have found that you can bid very cheaply and lose money on your bid and then, after you get the bid, you have what are add-ons that were not presupposed in the original bidding document. In other words, all of a sudden you find out that the density of the soil upon which this goes was not disclosed in the original bidding process and so, since this was not known and not included in the original bidding documents, this costs more money and then all of this goes to a cost-plus contract. And all of a sudden that is how a contract can escalate from a known, fixed cost to all of a sudden you think you are building an experimental project. By the time you get through, that same project will cost you 3 or 4 times as much as it did when the original bidder successfully bid on getting the project with no apparent profit in sight.

To some degree, that has become commonplace, unfortunately, in bidding processes. You really do not have to worry about how much money you are going to make on the initial sale or contract. What you are looking at is how much money you can make when that contract has to be changed by unknown preconditions of the sale of that commodity. That is where it is all at.

So for him to say what he said is either being very naive for a graduate attorney with a law degree, or he has never participated in nuclear sales of equipment at fixed prices and known them to hold that price at a future date. Or maybe he just does not know much about how things are done. This does not even touch in the area of kickbacks, rebates, and bribery in the foreign arena in order to get business.

I was a businessman for 40 years myself. I know how competition works. It is no different in the mom-and-pop store versus another store or a nuclear reactor sale from this country versus a nuclear reactor sale from another country, or an airplane manufacturer trying to sell an American airplane versus a foreign aircraft from a foreign country competing with that sale.

Business is business. It is dog eat dog out there. And I can assure you when somebody makes a sale out there in a knowledgeable businesslike way, if on the top they are crying and the handerkerchief is out, "I am hardly going to make any money on this sale," you can bet your bottom dollar there is more money coming from somewhere else that somebody has not thought about in conjunction with that sale and as a result of that sale.

So I really discount a great deal of the argument that Mr. Malone makes that there was no economic benefit or mode involved in this. There are big bucks in the sale of nuclear reactors, equipment, and anything dealing with nuclear manufacturing.

Again, his answer:

My participation was not as an independent actor, but as part of an Administration team whose members worked in concert in support of established policy objectives; and finally,

As head of the OES bureau, I had an official responsibility to apply my best efforts to further U.S. non-proliferation objectives.

Answer. Subsequently, the Office of the Legal Adviser advised me that there was a reasonable basis for me to have concluded that my involvement in these efforts to advance U.S. non-proliferation policy did not violate any of the disqualification pledges in my May 4 letter to the committee.

Therefore, I would maintain that my decision in all matters related to my substantive responsibility to promote U.S. non-proliferation policy was appropriate. Again, of course, I sincerely regret any misunderstanding that may have arisen.

Question. You stated, under questioning, that you were an employee of the law firm of Doub and Muntzing, and not a partner. Yet, on several filings by Doub and Muntzing with the Justice Department, in connection with the Foreign Agents Registration Act, you are referred to as a partner. What was your relationship with the firm? How was that relationship different from other individuals employed by the firm? What benefits did you receive as a partner that other employees were not receiving?

Answer. During the period of my employment at the law firm of Doub and Muntzing, I was a salaried employee, not a partner. I had no ownership interest in the firm and did not share in the firm's profits nor were financial statements made available to me. The firm was a professional corporation chartered under the laws of the District of Columbia with all of the stock owned by William O. Doub and L. Manning Muntzing.

My relationship to the firm was exactly like all other lawyers in the firm during the period I was there. Other than William O. Doub and L. Manning Muntzing; we were all salaried employees, not partners.

I received no benefits as a partner. I was not a partner. I received only those benefits made available to the salaried lawyers in the firm. The only members of the firm who received the benefits of partnership were William O. Doub and L. Manning Muntzing, the partners.

Question. You stated that an error was made in the Supplemental statement, pursuant to the Foreign Agents Registration Act, signed and submitted by you to the Department of Justice on April 10, 1979. Specifically, you stated that your response to item 5 (has any person named in item 4 rendered services directly in furtherance of the interests of any foreign principal?) which appeared as follows: "Yes, James L. Malone has rendered services directly in furtherance of the interests of Taiwan Power Co.", was inaccurate. Rather it should have read, "James Malone plans to render service. . . ."

Question. Is this still your explanation?

Question. How do you reconcile your answer to the above with the fact that the April 10, 1979 filing also indicates that you "expended small amounts for taxis" in connection with your activities on behalf of Taiwan Power Company?

Answer. During the course of my employment with Doub and Muntzing, my only duties which related to the Taiwan Power Company involved compiling periodic reports from publicly available data for wide distribution among the firm's clients, including Taiwan Power Company, interested in export license and reprocessing requests. At times it was necessary to go to various government agencies to collect such data, and I may have incurred small expenses for taxis in doing so.

Answer. I do maintain that the explanation I gave with regard to the question of my registration as a foreign agent for Taiwan Power Co. is substantially correct.

Answer. From 1979 to 1980, the law firm of Doub and Muntzing, and several individual firm lawyers including myself, were registered with the Justice Department as "foreign agents" of Taiwan Power Company.

Answer. This registration was done in anticipation of additional work for that utility that was never retained and, thus, was never performed. The language in the registration was erroneously phrased in the past tense when it should correctly have been in the future tense.

Answer. This registration was subsequently terminated retroactive to October 1, 1979, a fact noted by Chairman Percy during my 1981 hearings.

Question. On August 29, 1985 you completed your Financial Disclosure Report, pursuant to the Ethics in Government Act of 1978. On October 8, 1985 you amended that report with the inclusion of a letter from you to Mr. Knute E. Malmborg, Assistant Legal Adviser for Management, stating that you would recuse yourself from participation in any matter concerning a company in which you or members of your family have a financial interest.

□ 2030

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to yield the floor to the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island without my losing my right to the floor.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I regret having to do this, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ZORINSKY] is in the process of making a first speech. So I must object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. ZORINSKY. I am sure that will spur me on until the early hours of the morning in a more than ever determined manner to make sure that the Malone nomination is blocked, stays blocked, and remains blocked as long as there is life in this body.

Question. At whose initiative or suggestion did you write such a letter? Why was it believed that such a letter was necessary or desirable?

Question. Do you or members of your family have a financial interest in any company currently doing business in Belize? Do you or your family have a financial interest in any company which, to the best of your knowledge, may be planning to do business there?

Answer. The letter of recusal was written at the suggestion of Mr. Knute E. Malmborg, Assistant Legal Adviser for Management, Department of State. I was informed that it was standard practice to submit such a letter when a nominee, his spouse or a minor child, has any financial interest in any company which the Legal Adviser's Office has identified as doing business in a country to which he is being sent. I hold approximately 43 shares of Texaco common stock as custodian for my minor son under the Uniform Gifts to Minors Act. Texaco, I am advised, has some petroleum sales in Belize.

Answer. Neither I nor any member of my family have, to the best of my knowledge, any financial interest in any company which is planning to do business in Belize, with the exception of the Texaco common stock just mentioned.

Question. You were asked about the major findings of a report prepared by the Office of the Inspector General (IG) following a review by the Office of the OES Bureau during your stewardship. In addition to your very general response to that question, please answer the following detailed questions:

Question. Did the IG's report find that management of the OES Bureau was "Inadequate"?

Question. Did that report question the judgment and propriety of a contract with the law firm of Dickstein, Shapiro and Morin to retain the services of Leigh Ratiner as your assistant? How much was Mr. Ratiner paid for those services? How long was he employed by you under contract? Did this contract violate State Department rules against personal service contracts?

Question. Did the report express surprise that more energy was not devoted to diplomatic contracts to build support for the U.S. position prior to the last negotiating session of the Law of the Sea Conference? Did it conclude that, "it was clear by early March that there was insufficient preparation to serve our policy interests (with respect to the LOS negotiations"?

Here are the answers from Mr. Malone:

Answer. As I explained in great detail during the hearing on February 19, I note with satisfaction, that OES, under my over four year tenure became a very well run and efficient organization. The Action Plan, which I initiated to upgrade and incorporate into U.S. foreign policy the views of those with experience in science and technology matters, was endorsed and supported wholeheartedly by Secretary Shultz and has successfully achieved many of its objectives.

Answer. In the final IG report in 1982, the Inspector General made a number of recommendations. Some of these recommendations were accepted as made and adopted; some were modified in accordance with mutual agreement and adopted; and others were negotiated and were finally determined not to be appropriate to pursue further. The intent of the Inspector General's report, which is an internal management document, was to improve the management of the Bureau. This was fully accomplished and both the Bureau and the Inspectors were fully satisfied with the outcome.

Answer. The Department did enter a contract with Dickstein, Shapiro and Morin on July 24, 1981 to provide specified written work products during the Law of the Sea (LOS) negotiations. The specified written work products included advice on background, personalities and history of LOS; commentaries on parts of the proposed treaty; analyses of alternative approaches; assessments of negotiability of parts of the treaty; and provision of information to elicit international reactions to possible U.S. proposals. Mr. Leigh Ratiner was the principal investigator under that contract.

Answer. The Department made payments in October 1981, totalling $80,000 in accordance with an approved contract covering the period of July 24 to September 30, 1981. At my request, the firm continued to provide specified work products after the expiration of the contract period and, in accordance with procurement practice, an equitable adjustment was made and payment of approximately $120,000 for those services was made. The contract was approved by the Department's Contracting Services Division and the Office of the Legal Adviser, which also subsequently confirmed the legality of the contract and the equitable adjustment. The contract was also reviewed by the Department's Inspector General and the Defense Contract Audit Agency.

Answer. Since it was decided that Mr. Leigh Ratiner of the firm of Dickstein, Shapiro and Morin should become directly involved in the LOS negotiations, the Legal Adviser recommended that he be appointed a special government employee. This was done on March 10, 1982 and he was paid for time actually employed at a rate of $221.12 per day, not to exceed $2,211.54 every two weeks (GA 15, step 10). His employment was terminated on April 30, 1982.

Answer. The question of preparation for the March, 1982 Law of the Sea session was addressed. My responsibilities as the President's Special Representative involved all aspects of our Law of the Sea negotiations and received a major portion of my attention. We spent a great deal of effort on preparation for the March, 1982 session. I believe we were fully prepared when negotiations began.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, DC, March 12, 1986.

Hon. RICHARD G. LUGAR,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Following the February 19 nomination hearing of James Malone to be ambassador to Belize, Senator Zorinsky submitted additional questions to be answered for the record.

Please find enclosed the answers to those questions. A number of questions answered below have been asked in slightly different form before and responded to. The enclosed responses constitute further expansion on previous answers.

Sincerely,

JAMES W. DYER,
Acting Assistant Secretary, Legislative and Intergovernmental Affairs.

Enclosure: As stated.

Question. Did you at any time during the course of your review of the transcript of your May 13, 1982 nomination hearing seek to alter your remarks or those of Senator Percy's so as to change the nature of the exchange contained there? Yes or No? How did you change it? Were you told by officials at the State Department that this could be done by you? Yes or No? By Whom?

Answer. No, I did not in any way alter or change the transcript which was provided to me by the Committee for my information only. In order to fully clarify what I believed to be an ambiguity in that transcript, I sent a letter of clarification dated May 21 to the Chairman Percy. Other than the reference by my Deputy referred to in my answer to question two, I do not recall any discussion concerning whether it was permissible to correct such a transcript. To the best of my knowledge the transcript of that hearing was never printed.

Question. You indicated in response to my written question that colleague may have suggested that you amend the transcript to correct the record. Who was that? Did you discuss this suggestion with anyone else? Who?

Answer. My principal Deputy Assistant Secretary, a subordinate of mine suggested as a practical matter we might clarify this ambiquity by correcting the transcript. This was only a suggestion. We decided it was not the appropriate way in which to clear up the ambiguity and decided instead to send a letter to the Chairman. I do not remember discussing this suggestion with anyone else—whether or not any members of my staff did so. I simply do not know.

Question. Did you at any time following the May 13th hearing speak to Under Secretary Richard Kennedy about your testimony that he had told you that it was proper for you to involve yourself in the Eximbank/Taiwan Power issue despite your written commitment to the Committee. Yes or No? Did you ask him to corroborate that testimony in any way, either in writing or orally to any member of the Committee? Yes or No? What did he say?

Answer. Yes, I did. I do not recall specifically asking the Under Secretary to communicate with the Committee? We did discuss the content of the letter to Chairman Percy in which I sought to clarify the ambiguity in my testimony referred to in questions number one and two above. While I do not recall his exact remarks, the letter to the chairman accurately reflects our discussion.

Question. Were your contacts with the President of Exim on behalf of Taiwan Power at your own initiative or at the explicit direction of your superior(s)? Please provide names.

Answer. My contacts with Mr. Draper were, as I recall, urged by my own Nuclear Division staff, and were with the concurrence—though not at the direction—of my senior departmental colleagues.

The Under Secretary for Management, as well as the Assistant Secretary for East Asian and Pacific Affairs and the Assistant Secretary for Economic and Business Affairs, were all in agreement with the policy that some contacts should be made with the Eximbank to achieve a more favorable loan for Taiwan Power.

Question. Your involvement in the Eximbank/Taiwan Power issue has caused you a great many problems. In retrospect, do you believe that you exercised good judgment in involving yourself in this matter in light of written commitments you had made to the Foreign Relations Committee concerning former clients of yours and your firms? Yes or No? Would you make the same decision again to involve yourself in this issue or a similar one where a former client of yours or your firms has any involvement?

Answer. Yes, I believe that my decision in matters related to my substantive responsibility to promote U.S. non-proliferation policy was appropriate. While I also continue to believe that I did not violate any commitments to the committee, in retrospect, I would nevertheless conclude that the potential for misunderstanding or confusion in this instance was such that in a similar situation in the future I would turn the matter over to senior colleagues in the Department.

Question. Do you believe that it is important for a U.S. Ambassador to be an individual of sound judgment, with strong managerial and diplomatic skills?

Answer. Yes, I do.

Question. Did a report by the Office of the Inspector General (IG) on the management and operations of the OES Bureau during a portion of your stewardship find that management was "inadequate"? Yes or No? What explanation did the IG's report cite as evidence to support this conclusion? Please be specific.

Question. Did the IG's report question the judgment and propriety of a contract approved by you for the services of Leigh Ratiner? Yes or No? What justification did it contain for questioning your judgment?

Question. Did the IG's report express surprise that more energy was not devoted to diplomatic contacts to build support for the U.S. position prior to the last negotiating session of the LOS conference? Yes or No? Did it provide any explanation as to why this happened? Yes or No? What was the explanation?

Question. Did the IG's report also conclude that "it was clear by early March that there was insufficient preparation to serve our policy interests (with respect to the LOS negotiations)?" What explanation did the report provide as to why it believed such preparation was insufficient?

Answer. The IG report in 1982 made a large number of comments both positive and negative, and many recommendations. These recommendations have to be considered in the overall context and can not accurately and fairly be responded to in a simple yes or no format. Some of the recommendations made by the IG were adopted; some were modified in accordance with mutual agreement and adopted; and others were negotiated and determined not to be appropriate to pursue further. This entire internal management process was, of course, aimed toward the improvement of the management of the bureau. This I believe it accomplished. The Inspector General and the bureau were fully satisfied with the final outcome.

Answer. The fact that a contract with the firm of Dickstein, Shapiro and Morin was entered into was thoroughly considered in the IG report. Mr. Leigh Ratiner was the principal investigator under that contract as I have noted in my response to a previous question on this point. The original contract covered the period of July 24 through September 30, 1981 and called for specified written work products including advice on background, personalities and histories of LOS; commentaries on parts of the proposed treaty; analyses of alternative approaches; assessments of negotiability of parts of the treaty; and provision of information to elicit international reactions to possible U.S. proposals. At my request, the law continued to provide specified work products after the expiration of the initial contract period and in accordance with procurement practice, an equitable adjustment was made and payment made for those services. The entire contract was approved by the Department's Contracting Services Division and the Office of the Legal Adviser, which also confirmed the legality, of the contract and the equitable adjustment. The contract was also reviewed by the Department's Inspector General and the Defense Contract Audit Agency. Their conclusions did not suggest impropriety of the contract with Dickstein, Shapiro and Morin, but recommended improved procedures for reviewing work requirements under non-personal service contracts.

Answer. Again as I attempted to make clear in my response to the original written questions the preparation for the March 1982 Law of the Sea session was comprehensively covered. Although, as is virtually always the case, it may have been believed by some that additional efforts could have been made, I believe and the Senior Inter-Agency Group (SIG) responsible with me for these preparations believed that every effort on preparation for the March 1982 session was undertaken. It is our conclusion that we were fully prepared when negotiations began.

Question. Given the conclusions of this report concerning your judgment, management and diplomatic handling of LOS matters do you believe that you possess the qualities that you have indicated are necessary to be considered for a position as a U.S. Ambassador?

Answer. Yes, I do. The President of the United States has expressed his confidence in my ability to represent the United States as the Ambassador to Belize and if confirmed by the Senate, I will serve in that capacity faithfully.

Question. You have testified that despite your April 10, 1979 registration with the Justice Department which stated that "James Malone has rendered services directly in furtherance of the interest of the Taiwan Power Company" and "has had personal contracts with officials of the executive branch and Congress to protect the rights of Taiwan Power Company relating to its generation of nuclear power, particularly in relation to proposed legislation related to Taiwan" no such services were rendered.

Question. This same registration also indicated that you had expensed small amounts of taxi fares in connection with "our activities on behalf of Taiwan Power Company." Was this also in error in the filing?

Answer. No, it was not an error but was unnecessary under the Act. The activities referred to in which these taxi fares were incurred were connected with the reporting responsibilities I performed while employed by Doub & Muntzing.

Question. This same registration also indicated that Henry D. Kahn had been hired by the firm as a part time law clerk on January 15, 1979, and that he had rendered services to the registrant directly in furtherance of the interests of the foreign principal (Taiwan Power Company). Was Kahn hired as a part time law clerk? What duties did he perform on behalf of Taiwan Power? Is this another error in the filing?

Answer. Henry Kahn was hired by Doub & Muntzing as a part-time law clerk. At the time of the firm's original filing it was anticipated that he would also perform minor responsibilities in connection with work for Taiwan Power Company which would have required registration under the Act but which was never retained, and thus not performed.

Answer. Again, I must emphasize that the firm's entire registration was done in anticipation of requirements which did not materialize and thus was premature. The registration itself was then retroactively terminated.

Question. This registration also lists your position in the law firm as "partner." You have indicated that you were not a partner of the law firm. Why did you fill out the form indicating you were? Is this another error in the filing?

Question. On page 9 of this registration form a printed paragraph appears just above your signature. What is the substance of this paragraph? Does it state in part that "(T)he undersigned swears or affirms that he has read the information set forth in this registration statement and . . . that he is familiar with the contents thereof and that such contents are in their entirety true and accurate to the best of his knowledge and belief? Are you in the habit of signing documents which contain significant errors in them?

Answer. At no time during my association with Doub & Muntzing was I a partner of the firm in a legal or business sense. I was a salaried employee—I had no ownership interest in the firm and did not share in the firm's profits. The financial statements, client lists, and other business records were not available to me.

Answer. At times, however, as a business practice for external purposes, some lawyers employed by the firm, including myself, were referred to in various documents or conversations as "partners." It was not unusual at that firm for senior attorneys in that professional corporation to be referred to as partners, although they were not technically or legally partners.

Answer. I have tried on several occasions to explain the circumstances surrounding this registration carefully and completely. I do agree that the registration document was inadequately drafted, but the intention to comply with the law—even if in advance and, as it turned out, prematurely—was our main concern.

(Mr. EVANS assumed the chair.)

Mr. ZORINSKY. Mr. President, these were the texts of the questions I submitted after the hearings and to be answered in writing, which obviously were, and which I read in their entirety.

Now I would like to read from the transcripts of the hearing itself. It is a hearing on the nomination of James Malone, of Virginia, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Belize, dated Wednesday, February 19, 1986.

Before I begin, just let me briefly, in the best way possible that I might be able to, describe to viewers and the audience of C-SPAN who may be watching this evening what is happening in the U.S. Senate and taking place currently, for those individuals who may have just tuned in and for the benefit of people in the gallery observing, why there exists an empty Chamber and a single Senator speaking, and why the taxpayers of this country, for the probably noneloquent words I am currently speaking, are paying in excess of $500 a page just for printing costs, to be printed in something we call the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which is a record that we produce in the U.S. Senate. It is very voluminous and, for their edification, the paper is thin, so basically there are several hundred pages daily. Multiply that by $500 per page.

That does not at all include the costs for the official reporter who is taking down my words right now, or all the utilities.

With the advent of television, with these television lights, I would hate to be paying the electrical energy charges. Where I come from in Nebraska, the energy costs are much less, but I imagine that the Potomac Power & Electric Co., or whoever supplies the electricity for these lights, is very thankful that they are burning tonight, although I would say that the taxpayers probably are not.

In addition to that, those costs do not include the ongoing fact that the Senate is still in session, which means, if I am not wrong, that the physicians' office is still open, and the physicians serving the Senators, in the event of any physical problem, are still on duty. The security being maintained outside the building is still taking place if we are still in session.

The majority of this group, which is the Republicans, have to provide a Presiding Officer to sit in the presiding chair while we stay in session under these circumstances. Our clerks, our Parliamentarian, the pages, and those other people are still on duty. Everything is operating normally, for only one reason, and that is to satisfy a parliamentary procedure that is available to any Senator in the U.S. Senate to bring things to a stop, to bring things to a halt.

It was my conclusion and that of other Members on my side of the aisle, the membership of the Foreign Relations Committee, 4 months ago, when we voted down this nomination legally, ethically, morally, every way possible in the Foreign Relations Committee, that we were through with this nomination. Then, 4 months later, one of the Members decided to change his mind and change his vote, which changed the outcome of this nomination being dead.

In order to emphasize and comply with the original wishes of the Foreign Relations Committee's original vote in committee, it has prompted me to stand here as long as it takes, even though there are many important items confronting this body.

We have here a voluminous bill that has been placed on the desk of each U.S. Senator that is called the drug legislation. Everybody is for it and everybody thinks it is very good legislation, but we are not discussing that tonight.

We have before us, facing us before we can leave, something called the debt limit ceiling, raising it, so that your Government can borrow more money, so it will cost you more interest next year, despite the fact that we say we are trying to balance the budget.

We have something called a reconciliation bill, where we have sold part of America in order to raise money in order to reduce the deficit in the budget. Those are one-time savings, because obviously if you sell Conrail, if you sell off or transfer from a Federal entity moneys owed by the Government to private lending sources, that can only be done on time. So, really, it is not an economically commonsense, feasible way to do it.

I would like to emphasize this because many of the citizens of this country are not aware that the fiscal year for the Federal Government and this body ends September 30, and the new year starts October 1. Therefore, in the reconciliation bill, we found a way to save, I think, $700 million or $900 million. Around this place, a couple of hundred million gets lost under the table very easily. But, that being the case, we held up Federal revenue-sharing funds by 24 hours for that month so it would kick in the $900 million outlay into the current year, which is already in deep trouble, and saving it in the following year, where the reconciliation bill is trying to meet some Gramm-Rudman targets. That means we spent it this year by sending out the payments 24 hours earlier, so that they would appear in the ledger sheet of this year's budget, and next year it is considered a saving. That is just by a 24-hour manipulation in sending out the checks.

Of course, many of my colleagues on this floor called it balancing the budget by using smoke and mirrors, and another of my colleagues stood up and said, "We created so much smoke, I don't think we can any longer see the mirrors."

But that is how this business is run, and I think we have a wonderful country because, despite all that we are doing to it here tonight and many other nights, it has succeeded. There are no long lines waiting to leave America. They are all waiting to get into this country. I think it speaks very well for our Constitution, for our form of democracy and for our preservation of freedom for the people of this Nation.

That having been said, the fact remains that there are many more important things we could possibly and should be doing this evening than listening to one Senator in a lonely Chamber with the ongoing overhead that taxpayers can ill afford, because every time we spend a dime right now we have to go out and borrow it because we have about a $230 billion deficit and that means when we go out to borrow money to keep this place open tonight we pay interest on the money we borrow to keep it open because we do not have the surplus in the black to keep it open. I think that is sort of fiscal irresponsibility. I think it is unfortunate we have to do business this way.

I know it is not really good for the quality of life of elected officials to have to be in a Chamber at 9 o'clock in the evening or 10 minutes past 9 here debating something like this, and it is funny every colleague that might criticize me for doing it this evening has done it better than I have on other evenings.

So, those who refuse to give me unanimous consent to do something what God had preordained that an individual must functionally do once in a while, for them to deny you the opportunity to do that, indicates that they would like to have that done to them some day when they are conducting a filibuster, and I can assure the people it will be done to them also.

This evening we are discussing the nomination of James Malone to be Ambassador to Belize, and if I were a citizen or an inhabitant of the country of Balize, I would wonder if I was getting the booby prize or something for some Ambassador that 4 months ago was turned down in committee, and tonight we are trying to resurrect his ambassadorship, and if his resurrection is successful, they get someone that I hope they read the record tonight that does go into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD because I think it will be a sad commentary on the caliber or just the appearance of the caliber of people that we are sending as an Ambassador to that nation.

I think because of that inference it would be well to have pulled the name down and not submitted him as an Ambassador. I cannot conceive of a country that we have out of 240 million Americans that someone else would not be qualified, just as qualified, or maybe even just a little better qualified, than Mr. James Malone in continuing to debate his nomination.

But that is the way the game is played around this place and that is the way it is and, having been a former businessman for 40 years, I conclude that if I run my business the way we run the Senate back here I would have had to declare bankruptcy within 2 weeks after being in business because certainly I could not have afforded what the taxpayers can no longer afford and that is what we are doing right now in the Senate Chamber.

Belize will have a United States Ambassador. Whether it will be Mr. Malone or someone else, that is for the future to answer. But coming from a State like Nebraska, which I am very proud to represent, we have something called agriculture out there which is of big concern to us, and I know agriculture is of big concern to the country of Belize, and even though some of my colleagues in this room vote on agriculture like they never had to eat and they vote in opposition to agriculture and some of my colleagues, I think, actually vote based on the fact that they believe that the food is born in the aisles of the supermarkets, not on the farms or the plains of America where the farmer has to plant and tend and harvest and then hope that he gets more for the product than what it cost him to produce it.

I think there is a common denominator between Belize and the State of Nebraska. I think that common denominator is agriculture and its ultimate product called food and fiber.

As long as we are speaking about food and fiber and agriculture, I have even introduced in the waning days and hours a bill which I think is very important to agriculture. It is a small bill. It is called S. 1051. It only has 150 pages and again in case eventually and hopefully when an Ambassador is assigned to Belize and the RECORD is read, and someone in Belize might read this CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I want to make sure included in it is a bill that I have introduced that if they ever get in the same condition or situation that our agriculture is in, and we are under severe economic pressure right now—we have problems in exporting sufficient agriculture, we have problems in the cost of production being higher than what we sell the commodities for—we have overproduction, we have cost for storage of approximately $8 billion of surplus products in agriculture that we proudly hold in big bins and pay $900 million a year of the taxpayers' money to store—I certainly would not want Belize to ever have to spend $900 million a year to store excess grain that they might produce.

So I would like to take this opportunity to provide what I think is an answer. It is a bill to provide price and income protection for farmers and to ensure consumers an abundance of food and fiber at reasonable prices, and for other purposes.

It starts out with the words "Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this act, with the following table of contents may be cited as the Food and Agriculture Act of 1985.' "

PART A—COMMODITY PROGRAMS

TITLE I—WHEAT

MARKETING QUOTAS

SEC. 101. Effective only for the 1986 through 1989 crops of wheat, section 332 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 is amended to read as follows:

"PROCLAMATIONS OF MARKETING QUOTAS

"SEC. 332. (a) Whenever prior to April 15 in any calendar year the Secretary determines that the total supply of wheat in the marketing year beginning in the next succeeding calendar year will, in the absence of a marketing quota program, likely be excessive, the Secretary shall proclaim that a national marketing quota for wheat shall be in effect for such marketing year and for either the following marketing year or the following three marketing years, if the Secretary determines and declares in such proclamation that a three- or four-year marketing quota program is necessary to effectuate the policy of this Act. In the case of the 1986 crop, such determination and proclamation shall be made as soon as practicable after the enactment of the Food and Agriculture Act of 1985.

"(b) If a national marketing quota for wheat has been proclaimed for any marketing year, the Secretary shall determine and proclaim the amount of the national marketing quota for such marketing year not earlier than January 1 or later than April 15 of the calendar year preceding the year in which such marketing year begins, except that in the case of the 1986 crop, such determination and proclamation shall be made as soon as practicable after the enactment of the Food and Agriculture Act of 1985. The amount of the national marketing quota for wheat for any marketing year shall be an amount of wheat that the Secretary estimates is required to meet anticipated needs during such marketing year, taking into consideration domestic requirements, export demand, emergency food aid needs, and adequate carryover stocks.

"(c) If, after the proclamation of a national marketing quota for wheat for any marketing year, the Secretary determines that the national marketing quota should be terminated or increased to meet a national emergency or a material increase in the demand for wheat, the national marketing quota shall be increased or terminated by the Secretary.".

SEC. 102. Effective only for the 1986 through 1989 crops of wheat, section 334 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act is amended to read as follows:

"MARKETING QUOTA APPORTIONMENT FACTOR

"SEC. 333. (a) The Secretary shall establish a marketing quota apportionment factor for each crop of wheat for which a national marketing quota is proclaimed under section 332 of this Act. The apportionment factor shall be determined by dividing the national marketing quota for such crop of wheat by the average of the number of bushels of wheat that the Secretary determines was produced in the United States during the crop years 1980 through 1984 adjusted to reflect the amount of wheat that would have been produced during such years except for (1) drought, flood, or other natural disaster, or other conditions beyond the control of producers and (2) participation in any acreage reduction, set-aside, or diversion programs for wheat during such crop years, as determined by the Secretary.".

SEC. 103. Effective only for the 1986 through 1989 crops of wheat, section 334 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 is amended to read as follows:

"FARM MARKETING QUOTAS

□ 2120

Now we get to the exciting part.

"SEC. 334. (a) For each crop of wheat for which a national marketing quota has been proclaimed under section 332 of this Act, the Secretary shall establish a farm marketing quota for each farm on which wheat was produced, or considered produced, during the crop years 1980 through 1984.

"(b) The farm marketing quota shall be equal to the average number of acres of wheat produced, or considered produced, on the farm during the crop years 1980 through 1984 multiplied by (1) the average yield for wheat produced, or considered produced, on the farm during such crop years as determined by the Secretary on such basis as the Secretary determines will provide a fair and equitable yield, and (2) by the marketing quota apportionment factor.

"(c) For the purposes of this section, wheat shall be considered to have been produced on the farm in any crop year to the extent that the Secretary determines that wheat was not produced on the farm (1) because of drought, flood, or other natural disaster, or other condition beyond the control of the producer as determined by the Secretary, or (2) because the producers on the farm participated in any acreage reduction, set-aside, or diversion program for wheat during such crop years.

"(d) Farm marketing quotas shall be established by the Secretary under this section by June 1 of the calendar year preceding the marketing year for which a national marketing quota has been proclaimed under section 332 of this Act, except that in the case of the 1986 crop, such quotas shall be established as soon as practicable after the enactment of the Food and Agriculture Act of 1985.".

SEC. 104. Effective only for the 1986 through 1989 crops of wheat, section 335 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 is amended to read as follows:

"MARKETING PENALTIES

"SEC. 335. (a) The marketing of wheat produced on a farm in excess of the farm marketing quota shall be subject to a penalty at a rate per bushel equal to 75 per centum of the national average market price for wheat during the immediately preceding marketing year.

"(b) The penalty provided for in subsection (a) shall be paid—

"(1) if such wheat is marketed by sale to a person within the United States, by the person who acquired the wheat from the producer, but an amount equivalent to the penalty may be deducted by the buyer from the price paid to the producer;

"(2) if such wheat is marketed through a warehouseman or agent, by the warehouseman or agent, who may deduct an amount equivalent to the penalty from the price paid to the producer; or

"(3) if such wheat is marketed directly to any person outside the United States, by the producer.

"(c) If any producer falsely identifies or fails to certify the acreage planted to wheat for harvest or fails to account for the disposition of any wheat produced on such planted acreage in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary, an amount of wheat equal to the farm program yield, as determined by the Secretary under section 107D(d) of the Agricultural Act of 1949, times the planted acreage, shall be deemed to have been marketed in excess of the farm marketing quota, and the penalty provided for in subsection (a) of this section on such amount of wheat shall be paid by the producer.

"(d) Wheat subject to a farm marketing quota may be carried over by the producer from one marketing year to the succeeding marketing year and may be marketed without penalty imposed by this section in the succeeding marketing year to the extent that (1) the total amount of wheat available for marketing from the farm in the marketing year from which the wheat is carried over did not exceed the farm marketing quota, or (2) the total amount of wheat available for marketing in the succeeding marketing year (that is, the sum of the amount of wheat carried over and the amount of wheat produced on the farm subject to a farm marketing quota in the succeeding marketing year) does not exceed the farm marketing quota for the succeeding marketing year.

"(e) Wheat produced in a calendar year in which marketing quotas are in effect for the marketing year beginning therein shall be subject to such quotas even though it is marketed prior to the date on which such marketing year begins.

"(f) The Secretary shall require collection of the penalty provided for in this section upon a proportion of each unit of wheat marketed from the farm equal to the proportion that the wheat available for marketing from the farm in excess of the farm marketing quota is of the total amount of wheat available for marketing from the farm if satisfactory proof is not furnished the Secretary as to the disposition to be made of the excess wheat, in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary, prior to the marketing of any wheat from the farm. All funds collected under this section during one marketing year shall be deposited in a special account with the Treasurer of the United States until the end of the next succeeding marketing year. Upon certification of the Secretary, there shall be paid out of such special account to persons designated by the Secretary the amount by which the penalty collected exceeds that amount of penalty due upon wheat marketed in excess of the farm marketing quota for any farm. Such special account shall be administered by the Secretary, and the basis for, the amount of, and the person entitled to receive a payment from such account, when determined in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary, shall be final and conclusive.

"(g) Until the amount of the penalty provided by this section is paid, a lien on the wheat with respect to which such penalty is incurred, and any subsequent wheat subject to marketing quotas in which the person liable for payment of the penalty has an interest, shall be in effect in favor of the United States for the amount of the penalty.

"(h) The persons liable for the payment or collection of the penalty on any amount of wheat shall be liable also for interest thereon from the date the penalty becomes due until the date of payment of such penalty at a rate per annum equal to the rate of interest that was charged the Commodity Credit Corporation by the Treasurer of the United States on the date such penalty became due.

"(i) If marketing quotas for wheat are not in effect for any marketing year, all previous marketing quotas applicable to wheat shall be terminated, effective as of the first day of such marketing year. Such termination shall not abate any penalty previously incurred by a producer or relieve any buyer of the duty to remit penalties previously collected.".

SEC. 105. Effective only for the 1986 through 1989 crops of wheat, section 336 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 is amended to read as follows:

"REFERENDUM

"SEC. 336. If a national marketing quota for wheat for one, two, or four marketing years is proclaimed, the Secretary shall, not later than August 1 of the calendar year in which such national marketing quota is proclaimed, conduct a referendum, by secret ballot, of wheat producers to determine whether they favor or oppose marketing quotas for the marketing year or years for which proclaimed. In the case of the 1986 crop, the referendum shall be conducted as soon as practicable after the date of enactment of the Food and Agriculture Act of 1985. Any producer who produced wheat on a farm during at least one of the crop years 1980 through 1984 shall be eligible to vote in the referendum. the Secretary shall proclaim the results of any referendum held hereunder within thirty days after the date of such referendum and if the Secretary determines that 50 per centum or more of the producers voting in the referendum voted against marketing quotas, the Secretary shall proclaim that marketing quotas will not be in effect with respect to the crop of wheat produced for harvest in the calendar year following the calendar year in which the referendum is held. If the Secretary determines that more than one-half of the producers voting in a referendum approve marketing quotas for a period of two or four marketing years, no referendum shall be held for the subsequent year or years of such period.".

SEC. 106. Effective only for the 1986 through 1989 crops of wheat, section 338 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 is amended to read as follows:

"TRANSFER OF FARM MARKETING QUOTAS

"SEC. 338. Farm marketing quotas shall not be transferable, but, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary for such purpose, the farm marketing quota on a farm for any marketing year, or any portion thereof, may be voluntarily surrendered to the Secretary by the producer, and the Secretary may reallocate the amount of any farm marketing quotas so surrendered to other farms having farm marketing quotas on such basis as the Secretary may determine.".

LOAN RATES, TARGET PRICES, DISASTER PAYMENTS, WHEAT ACREAGE REDUCTION AND SETASIDE PROGRAM, AND LAND DIVERSION FOR THE 1986 THROUGH 1989 CROPS OF WHEAT

SEC. 107. Effective only for the 1986 through 1989 crops of wheat, the Agricultural Act of 1949 is amended by adding after section 107C the following new section:

"SEC. 107D. Notwithstanding any other provision of law—

"(a)(1) Except as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection, the Secretary shall make available to producers loans and purchases for each of the 1986 through 1989 crops of wheat at such level as the Secretary determines will maintain the competitive relationship of wheat to other grains in domestic and export markets after taking into consideration the cost of producing wheat, supply and demand conditions, and world prices for wheat.

"(2) For any crop of wheat for which marketing quotas are in effect, the level of loans and purchases determined under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall not be less than the higher of—

"(A) 75 per centum of the national average cost of production per bushel of wheat, as determined by the Secretary taking into consideration variable expenses, general farm overhead, taxes and insurance, interest, and capital replacement costs (but excluding residual returns for management and risk); or

"(B) $3.55 per bushel.

"(3) For any crop of wheat for which marketing quotas are not in effect, the level of loans and purchases determined under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall not be less than the higher of—

"(A) 85 per centum of the simple average price received by producers of wheat, as determined by the Secretary, during the immediately preceding five marketing years, excluding the year in which the average price was the highest and the year in which the average price was the lowest; or

"(B) $3.30 per bushel.

"(b)(1)(A) The Secretary shall make available to producers payments for each of the 1986 through 1989 crops of wheat in an amount computed as provided in this subsection. Payments for any crop of wheat shall be computed by multiplying (i) the payment rate, by (ii) the farm program acreage for the crop, by (iii) the farm program payment yield for the crop. Payments for any crop for which marketing quotas are in effect shall not exceed an amount equal to the payment rate multiplied by the farm marketing quota. In no event may payments be made under this paragraph for any crop on a greater acreage than the acreage actually planted to wheat.

"(B) The payment rate of wheat shall be the amount by which the established price for the crop of wheat exceeds the higher of—

"(i) the national weighted average market price received by farmers during the first five months of the marketing year for such crop, as determined by the Secretary, or

"(ii) the loan level determined under subsection (a) of this section for such crop.

"(C)(i) For any crop of wheat for which marketing quotas are in effect, the established price shall not be less than the higher of—

"(I) the national average cost of production per bushel of wheat as determined by the Secretary under subsection (a)(1) of this section; or

"(II) $4.65 per bushel.

"(ii) For any crop of wheat for which wheat marketing quotas are not in effect, the established price shall not be less than—

"(I) in the case of the 1986 crop, $4.38 per bushel; and

"(II) in the case of the 1987 through 1989 crops, the established price for the preceding crop adjusted by the Secretary to reflect any change in (a) the average adjusted cost of production for the two crop years immediately preceding the year for which the determinaton is made from (b) the average adjusted cost of production for the two crop years immediately preceding the year previous to the one for which the determination is made.

"(D) The total quantity on which payments would otherwise be payable to a producer on a farm for any crop under this paragraph shall be reduced by the quantity on which any disaster payment is made to the producer for the crop under paragraph (2) of this subsection.

"(2)(A) Except as otherwise provided in subparagraph (C) of this paragraph, if the Secretary determines that the producers on a farm are prevented from planting any portion of the acreage intended for wheat to wheat or other nonconserving crops because of drought, flood, or other natural disaster, or other condition beyond the control of the producers, the Secretary shall make a prevented planting disaster payment to the producers on the number of acres so affected but not to exceed the acreage planted to wheat for harvest (including any acreage that the producers were prevented from planting to wheat or other nonconserving crop in lieu of wheat because of drought, flood, or other natural disaster, or other condition beyond the control of the producers) in the immediately preceding year, multiplied by 75 per centum of the farm program payment yield established by the Secretary times a payment rate equal to 33⅓ per centum of the established price for the crop.

"(B) Except as otherwise provided in subparagraph (C) of this paragraph, if the Secretary determines that because of drought, flood, or other natural disaster, or other condition beyond the control of the producers, the total quantity of wheat that the producers are able to harvest on any farm is less than the result of multiplying 60 per centum of the farm program payment yield established by the Secretary for such crop by the acreage planted for harvest for such crop, the Secretary shall make a reduced yield disaster payment to the producers at a rate equal to 50 per centum of the established price for the crop for the deficiency in production below 60 per centum for the crop.

"(C) Producers on a farm shall not be eligible for disaster payments under this paragraph if crop insurance is available to them under the Federal Crop Insurance Act with respect to their wheat acreage.

"(D) Notwithstanding the provisions of subparagraph (C) of ths paragraph, the Secretary may make disaster payments to producers on a farm under this paragraph whenever the Secretary determines that—

"(i) as the result of drought, flood, or other natural disaster, or other condition beyond the control of the producers, producers on a farm have suffered substantial losses of production either from being prevented from planting wheat or other nonconserving crop or from reduced yields, and that such losses have created an economic emergency for the producers;

"(ii) crop insurance indemnity payments under the Federal Crop Insurance Act and other forms of assistance made availabale by the Federal Government to such producers for such losses are insufficient to alleviate such economic emergency; and

"(iii) additional assistance must be made available to such producers to alleviate the economic emergency.

The Secretary may make such adjustments in the amount of payments made available under this subparagraph with respect to individual farms so as to ensure the equitable allotment of such payments among producers, taking into account other forms of Federal disaster assistance provided to the producers for the crop involved.

"(c)(1) For any crop of wheat for which marketing quotas are not in effect, the Secretary shall proclaim a national program acreage. The proclamation shall be made not later than August 15 of the calendar year for the crop harvested in the next succeeding calendar year, except that in the case of the 1986 crop, the proclamation shall be made as soon as practicable after the enactment of the Food and Agriculture Act of 1985. The Secretary may revise the national program acreage first proclaimed for any crop for the purpose of determining the allocation factor under paragraph (2) of this subsection if the Secretary determines it necessary based upon the latest information, and the Secretary shall proclaim such revised national program acreage as soon as it is made. The national program acreage for wheat shall be the number of harvested acres the Secretary determines (on the basis of the weighted national average of the farm program payment yields for the crop for which the determination is made) will produce the quantity (less imports) that the Secretary estimates will be used domestically and for export during the marketing year for such crop. If the Secretary determines that carryover stocks of wheat are excessive or an increase in stocks is needed to assure desirable carryover, the Secretary may adjust the national program acreage by the amount the Secretary determines will accomplish the desired increase or decrease in carryover stocks.

"(2) The Secretary shall determine a program allocation factor for each crop of wheat for which marketing quotas are not in effect. The allocation factor for wheat shall be determined by dividing the national program acreage for the crop by the number of acres that the Secretary estimates will be harvested for such crop, except that in no event shall the allocation factor for any crop of wheat be more than 100 per centum nor less than 80 per centum.

"(3)(A) The individual farm program acreage for each crop of wheat for which marketing quotas are not in effect shall be determined by multiplying the allocation factor by the acreage of wheat planted for harvest on the farms for which individual farm program acreages are required to be determined. The farm program acreage shall not be further reduced by application of the allocation factor if the producers reduce the acreage of wheat planted for harvest on the farm from the acreage base established for the farm under subsection (e)(2) of this section by at least the percentage recommended by the Secretary in the proclamation of the national program acreage. The Secretary shall provide fair and equitable treatment for producers on farms on which the acreage of wheat planted for harvest is less than the acreage base established for the farm under subsection (e)(2) of this section, but for which the reduction is insufficient to exempt the farm from the application of the allocation factor.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I hate to interrupt the Senator. I know he is in the middle of something very exciting, but I want to take that risk. I have a letter in my hand from Mr. Malone.

Mr. ZORINSKY. Mr. President, under the precedents of the Senate, I shall be happy to yield to the majority leader if I am accorded unanimous consent to be rerecognized first to resume if this question comes back before the Senate and not to count this relinquishing against the two-speech rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there an objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, this is a letter addressed to me that I shall read for the RECORD.

PO Box 140,
McLean, VA, October 14, 1986.

Hon. ROBERT DOLE,
Senate Majority Leader, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. MAJORITY LEADER: It is clear that my partisan critics in the Senate intend to delay the work of the Senate by continuing to debate my nomination at length.

Recognizing the pressing business of the Senate at this time, the shortness of the time remaining, and the critical importance of issues crucial to our economic and national security, I cannot in good conscience recommend that you continue to keep my nomination before the Senate, as much as I appreciate your willingness to do so.

I believe the Senate should proceed to other matters. I am deeply gratified by the support of the majority of the members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and of the Senate itself in voting to proceed to Executive Session to take up my nomination. Nevertheless, I recommend that my nomination be temporarily laid aside. I say this regretfully, but I can no longer allow a lengthy debate over my nomination to impede the business of the Senate and of the nation.

Sincerely,

JAMES MALONE.

Mr. President, I think that indicates that there will be no further action on this nomination this session.

I hope on that basis that we might now proceed to morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 10:15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We are presently in executive session.

Mr. ZORINSKY. I relinquish the floor.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. DOLE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DOLE. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to routine morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is now in morning business until 10:15.

Mr. DOLE. Does the Senator from Nebraska have any additional comment?

Mr. ZORINSKY. I appreciate the offer of the majority leader, but I think at this time, I have made sufficient comments for this evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has enjoyed the comments for the last hour.

"Whereas, A secure domestic energy resource base should be a strategic part of our national security objectives; and

"Whereas, Presently the Middle East and North Africa have oil reserves of 433 billion barrels dwarfing the 27-billion-barrel reserves of the United States; and

"RESOLUTIONS CALLING UPON THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES TO URGE THE GOVERNMENT OF SOUTH AFRICA TO INDICATE ITS WILLINGNESS TO ENGAGE IN MEANINGFUL POLITICAL NEGOTIATIONS WITH THAT COUNTRY'S BLACK MAJORITY

"Whereas, since September, nineteen hundred and eight-four, a mounting unrest against racial oppression in the Republic of South Africa has led to the violent death of more than one thousand individuals, most of them black, the detention without charges of thousands more and a declared state of emergency in several areas of that country; and

"Whereas, a peaceful resolution to such violence and conflict is unlikely unless the Government of the Republic of South Africa moves to end its abhorrent system of apartheid which denies the country's black majority the right to vote, the right to own land, and the right to freedom of movement; and

"Whereas, the Government of the United States, the United Nations, and virtually every country in the world has condemned the practice of apartheid by the Government of South Africa and its enactment of the repressive measures that have led to the current violence; and

"Whereas, the Government of the United States has sought to use its influence and leverage to promote peace and peaceful change through diplomatic appeals and the imposition of limited economic sanctions; and

"Whereas, the Ninety-eighth Congress of the United States adopted the 'Mandela Freedom Resolution', calling for the unconditional release of Nelson Mandela, the black South African leader who has been imprisoned for twenty-three years and his wife Winnie Mandela, who has been a 'banned' person in South Africa for the past twenty-one years; and

"Whereas, the President of the United States has called for the South African Government to end its practice of detention without trial and lengthy imprisonment of black leaders, in addition to calling for the establishment of a government based on the consent of the governed; and

"Whereas, the Secretary of State of the United States has urged the release of Nelson Mandela and indicated the need for the South African Government to meet leaders of the black majority, including Mr. Mandela and the outlawed African National Congress; and

"Whereas, the African National Congress, which was banned in nineteen hundred and sixty, is today the oldest and most prominent of the organizations of resistance against the apartheid system of South Africa and is highly regarded by that country's black majority; and

"Whereas, representatives of the South African business community, clergy, and university student organizations have met or attempted to meet with officials of the African National Congress to establish lines of communications for future discussions on the problems of the country, and

"Whereas, Nelson Mandela, who has been in South African prisons since nineteen hundred and sixty-two and who is still considered the leader of the banned African National Congress, is regarded by many black South Africans as one of the most respected symbols of resistance against apartheid; and

"Whereas, it is evident that an end to South Africa's racial turmoil is impossible if the government of that country does not begin a meaningful dialogue with the leaders of the black majority; and

"Whereas, the continued turmoil and unrest in the Republic of South Africa threaten the peace, security, and stability of the other nations of southern Africa and has led to cross-border violence in the region; and

"Whereas, the urgent moment has arrived for the Government of South Africa to initiate bold steps to end apartheid and the current unrest and to achieve peace and peaceful change; Now, therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Massachusetts General Court calls upon the President of the United States to urge the Government of the Republic of South Africa to indicate its willingness to engage in political negotiations with that country's black majority:

"(1) By immediately granting unconditional freedom to Nelson Mandela and to all South African political prisoners and detainees;

"(2) By recognizing the African National Congress as a legitimate representative for the country's black majority; and

"(3) By establishing the framework for the political talks which hopefully could lead to a negotiated settlement with the black majority; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded by the Clerk of the House of Representatives to the President of the United States, the Massachusetts Senators in Congress, and to the President of the Republic of South Africa."

POM-890. A resolution adopted by the National Federation of Republican Women indicating their efforts towards combating drug abuse and community service projects in drug prevention; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

POM-891. A resolution adopted by the National Federation of Republican Women favoring the adoption of a budget that meets the targets set forth in the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit reduction law; ordered to lie on the table.

POM-892. A resolution adopted by the City Council of Oberlin, Ohio regarding apartheid in South Africa; ordered to lie on the table.

POM-893. A resolution adopted by the Congress of the Federated States of Micronesia; to the Committee on Appropriations:

"RESOLUTION

"Whereas, under the Trusteeship Agreement, the United States assumed an obligation to promote the political, economic, social, and educational advancement of the peoples of the Trust Territory, including what is now the Federated States of Micronesia; and

"Whereas, provision of adequate facilities for post-secondary education is an integral part of this obligation; and

"Whereas, despite the passage of many years, this obligation has never been met, although repeated funding requests for a new campus for the Community College of Micronesia have been made to the United States Congress; and

"Whereas, with the approval of the Compact of Free Association, the Trusteeship period is rapidly drawing to a close; and

"Whereas, the National Government of the Federated States of Micronesia recently submitted to the Congress of the United States a funding request of approximately $12,000,000 for the construction of a new campus for the Community College of Micronesia; and

"Whereas, anticipating that said request would meet the approval of the Congress of the United States, the Federated States of Micronesia National Government negotiated and received 301,013 square meters of land from the Pohnpei State Government to be used for the campus, said land being quitclaimed to the College of Micronesia on January 20, 1986; and

"Whereas, the existing Community College of Micronesia facilities are deteriorated and limit enrollment opportunities, as evidenced during the past 3 school years, when only 15 percent of students applying for entry to the college were admitted, due in great measure to insufficient classroom space and other facilities; and

"Whereas, it is the sense of the Congress of the Federated States of Micronesia that such a limited opportunity for enrollment into a Micronesian community college is a great setback in the area of education for the people of Micronesia; and

"Whereas, it is the further sense of the Congress of the Federated States of Micronesia that relevant and accessible opportunities for college education are vital to the attainment of Micronesia's development goals, and that the proposed new campus for the Community College of Micronesia can play a vital role in Micronesia's manpower development; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Fourth Congress of the Federated States of Micronesia, third Special Session, 1986, that the Congress of the United States is respectfully urged to appropriate, and the President of the United States to approve, funding necessary for the construction of a new campus for the Community College of Micronesia in Pohnpei State, Federated States of Micronesia; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States; the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives; the President of the United States Senate; the majority and minority leaders of both houses of the United States Congress; the Chairmen of the United States House of Representatives Committees on Appropriations and Interior and Insular Affairs; the Chairmen of the United States Senate Committees on Approriations and Energy and Natural Resources; the Secretary of the United States Department of Interior; and the President's Personal representative for Micronesian Status Negotiations."

REINSTATEMENT OF THREE-YEAR RECOVERY RULE

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to correct an egregious wrong that was done by the Tax Reform Act of 1986. As we all know, the goal of tax reform was to make needed improvements to the Tax Code to enhance the fairness and simplicity with which individuals and corporations are taxed in this country. Unfortunately, in the rush to enact legislation in this area, many compromises and sacrifices were made for the sake of attracting political support. As a result, the final bill fell far short of its objectives of fairness, growth, and simplicity.

One area in which I feel the principle of fairness was most blatantly disregarded was the retroactive repeal of the 3-year basis recovery rule for employees who contribute to their own retirement plans. These retirees, most of whom are Government employees, have long contributed to their pension plans, paying taxes all along with the expectation of receiving these already taxed contributions back during the first 3 years of their retirement. Under the Tax Reform Act, not only is this 3-year rule repealed, but it is done so retroactively. Thus workers who retired after July 1 of this year with the understanding that they would be entitled to 3 tax-free years of recovering the contributions they had made and paid taxes on throughout their careers will be told "tough luck." Through no delinquency or oversight of their own, they will find out after they retire that the rules in effect when they retired have been changed and as a result the nest egg they had been working so hard for will be denied to them. For those retirees who opted for a lump-sum payment of their benefit under the 3-year recovery rule, this will mean they may suddenly be required to make a large up-front tax payment which was not even discussed when they retired. For many Government retirees, this could result in a previously unexpected tax payment of $20,000 or more. Calling this "unfair," I feel, is a gross understatement. Treatment such as this is nothing short of criminal, and it was this provision that finally convinced me to make the difficult decision to vote against the Tax Reform Act.

The far-reaching impact of the repeal of the 3-year recovery rule will be felt by Federal, State, and local government employees all across the Nation. In my State of Hawaii, the State retirement system estimates that the change in the law will have adverse repercussions on over 80 percent of its recent retirees. Some of these retirees who had expected—and rightfully so—to pay only minimal taxes in 1986, will now find themselves taxed at rates as high as 49 percent. This, I feel, is far beyond what we should reasonably ask hard-working public servants to sacrifice for the sake of "tax reform." I sincerely hope my colleagues will join me in my effort to restore to these dedicated Americans the fair and equitable treatment they had been provided until the Tax Reform Act of 1986 was passed. Once the implications of the repeal of the 3-year rule become more clear, I feel the American public will demand that it be reinstated, and I look forward to working with my colleagues in the coming year to see that this happens.●

S. 2925. A bill to amend the Department of Energy Organization Act to authorize protective force personnel who guard the strategic petroleum reserve or its storage and related facilities to carry firearms while discharging their official duties and in certain instances to make arrests without warrant; to establish the offense of trespass on property of the strategic petroleum reserve; and for other purposes.

STRATEGIC PETROLEUM RESERVE SECURITY

● Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, pursuant to an executive communication referred to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, at the request of the Department of Energy, I send to the desk a bill to amend the Department of Energy Organization Act to give the Department of Energy explicit authority to arm its strategic petroleum reserve [SPR] security personnel and empower them in certain instances to make arrests without warrants for violations of Federal law, and to establish the Federal offense of trespass on federally owned SPR sites.

Mr. President, this measure was submitted and recommended by the Department of Energy, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill, and the executive communication which accompanies the proposal from the General Counsel, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill and letter were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"(i) has committed or is committing a felony; and

"(ii) is in or is fleeing from the immediate area of the felony; and

"(B) in the case of a felony or misdemeanor, if the violation is committed in the presence of the employee.".

SEC. 2. A new section 662 is added to the Department of Energy Organization Act after section 661 added by this Act to read as follows:

The Secretary shall post conspicuously on the property subject to the regulations notification that that property is subject to the regulations.

"(b) Whoever willfully violates a regulation of the Secretary issued under subsection (a) shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punished upon conviction by a fine of not more than $5,000, imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.".

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY,
Washington, DC, September 12, 1986.

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
President of the Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Enclosed is proposed legislation to give the Department of Energy explicit authority to arm its Strategic Petroleum Reserve (SPR) security personnel and empower them in certain instances to make arrests without warrants for violations of Federal law, and to establish the Federal offense of trespass on Federally-owned SPR sites.

PURPOSE OF THE LEGISLATION

The Department of Energy is custodian of a vast quantity of oil stored for use in an energy emergency. Experienced and professional protective force personnel are essential to maintaining the proper security level at the SPR. In order for the security personnel staff to be able to perform their duties properly, they must be armed and should have the authority to detain or arrest, without warrant if necessary, those persons who threaten site security by violating, or attempting to violate, Federal law.

The risk of terrorist activities at SPR sites, where crude oil essential to the national security is stored, or at related Government facilities used in oil transportation to and from those sites presents a real and present danger. All of the SPR sites are in relatively remote areas and subject to local law enforcement agencies. These agencies, however, have limited human and physical resources to apply to deterring acts by terrorists or other criminal groups. Moreover, while it is key to the security of the SPR that potential offenders be kept from vital SPR facilities and that there be an ability to react to apparent threats at SPR sites, SPR guards generally have authority only to make citizens' arrests for trespass under state law. Local enforcement agencies have deputized some protective force contractor personnel in order to provide them with some additional measure of authority with which to conduct their security functions.

Those deputy commissions, however, can be withdrawn by the local authorities at their sole discretion. In addition, those commissions are limited to specific jurisdictions. In Texas this limitation would not permit the interchange of personnel between many sites. Also, the commissions would be of no value if the protective force contractor personnel had to be moved across state lines to meet a significant threat posed at another site.

Protective force personnel of the Department of Energy and its contractors undergo a stringent training program to prepare them for dealing with a myriad of confrontation situations. Their ability to react to terrorist activities against persons and property, however, may be impaired to the detriment of the public safety and national security by their lack of confidence in their authority to respond to criminal conduct and their concern over personal civil liability in the event of error. Without federal or state arrest authority, SPR guards can make only citizens' arrests. These arrests are difficult to perfect and can result in deficiencies that end in the release of a criminal. In addition, the SPR guards could be subject to civil or criminal liability for honest and reasonable mistakes in the execution of their duties. The proposed legislation, therefore, primarily is intended to accord SPR guards adequate personal protection from civil or criminal liability when they discharge a firearm or arrest individuals while responsibly executing their duties.

THE BILL

The proposed legislation would add a new section to the Department of Energy Organization Act (42 U.S.C. §§ 7101-7352) to authorize the Secretary of Energy to arm SPR protective force personnel while they are protecting the SPR or its storage and related facilities. It also would authorize them to make arrests without warrant for violation of a federal offense committed in their presence or a felony if they have reasonable ground to believe that the person to be arrested has committed or is committing the felony.

The authority sought through the new section is similar to the specific authority already vested in protective force personnel at nuclear facilities under section 161k of the Atomic Energy Act (42 U.S.C. § 2201 (k)), and in personnel of several other agencies, e.g., United States Marshals (18 U.S.C. § 3053); Secret Service inspectors and agents (18 U.S.C. § 3056); postal inspectors (18 U.S.C. § 3061); General Services Administration special policemen (40 U.S.C. § 318d); the Customs Service (26 U.S.C. § 7607); and the Drug Enforcement Administration (21 U.S.C. § 878). Moreover, as in the case of the protective force personnel at nuclear facilities, the authority sought through the new section could be granted to contractor personnel as well as federal employees of the Department of Energy. This would be consistent with the long-standing, extensive, and successful use of contractors by the Department of Energy and its predecessor agencies to carry out agency missions.

The legislation also would make trespass on SPR sites designated by the Secretary a federal crime. There is no federal law of general applicability concerning trespass on federal property. A number of federal activities, however, are protected by trespass statutes that have proven to be useful in maintaining adequate security at covered installations. The trespass provision in this proposal is modeled after section 229 of the Atomic Energy Act (42 U.S.C. § 2278a), which makes it a federal offense to trespass on Department of Energy atomic energy facilities. See United States v. Thompson, 687 F.2d 1279 (10th Cir. 1982). The Secretary would be authorized to issue regulations prohibiting unlawful entry onto the SPR, its storage or related facilities, or real property subject to the jurisdiction of the Secretary under the SPR provisions of EPCA. Those who violate these regulations could be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

Given its importance to the security of the Nation, the SPR is a potential target of terrorists. The grave responsibility of assuring protection of the SPR falls upon and necessitates decisive action by its protective force personnel. Enactment of this legislation is necessary for the maintenance of adequate security of the SPR and its storage and related facilities so that they will continue to be available when needed.

COST AN BUDGET DATA

Enactment of this legislation will not result in a significant increase in budgetary requirements for the Department of Energy.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that from the standpoint of the President's program, there is no objection to the presentation of this legislation for the consideration of Congress.

Sincerely,

J. MICHAEL FARRELL,
General Counsel.●

SENATE RESOLUTION 507—RELATING TO THE SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION'S "OPINION MOLDER" REGULATION

Mr. ZORINSKY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Small Business:

S. RES. 507

Whereas the Small Business Administration's opinion molder regulation (13 CFR 120.101-2(b)) has unjustifiably precluded an entire genre of legitimate small businesses from the Small Business Administration financial assistance since the inception of the regulation in 1953;

Whereas so-called opinion-molding small businesses arguably deserve and require greater, not less, Small Business Administration assistance than other businesses;

Whereas the opinion molder regulation has undergone so many revisions that the exceptions obfuscate the original rationale of the regulation to protect the Small Business Administration from having to carry out any kind of a censorship role;

Whereas the Federal District Court of Colorado in its ruling regarding the opinion molder regulation on December 3, 1985, raises the issue of the very constitutionality of the regulation; and

Whereas the opinion molder regulation, at a minimum, violates the spirit of the First Amendment, regardless of court decisions on whether or not the regulation actually violates the letter of the Constitution: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Small Business Administration should amend or eliminate its opinion molder regulation to allow greater participation of legitimate small businesses in Small Business Administration financial assistance programs.

● Mr. ZORINSKY. Mr. President, I rise today to submit a resolution expressing the sense of the Senate that the Small Business Administration should amend or eliminate its "opinion molder" regulation. This regulation has unjustifiably prevented an entire genre of legitimate small businesses from receiving full benefits of the SBA, and the time is long overdue to put this practice to an end.

Specifically, the opinion molder rule precludes the SBA from granting financial assistance to any opinion molder, defined as those concerns "engaged in the creation, regulation, expression, dissemination, propagation or distribution of ideas, values, thoughts, opinions, or similar intellectual property regardless of medium, form or content." 13 CFR S120.101-2(b)

The SBA's expressed reasoning for the regulation is essentially the following: The SBA wishes to avoid lending to concerns which publish or produce or sell materials of a controversial nature which, while not illegal, may not be the public's interest to promote. Wishing to avoid a censorship role and lacking constitutional expertise, the SBA broadly exempts a huge category of businesses rather than to risk controversial content-based case by case decisions. While at first blush there would appear to be a certain logic to this line of thinking, upon further consideration it certainly would not seem to support the draconian reaction which is the opinion molder regulation.

The congressional authority for this regulation is based on the broad authorizing language of the 1953 SBA Act, which empowered the SBA to promulgate regulations for the "public good." Almost from its inception the regulation has been under attack from within and without the agency. A total of seven exceptions have been issued from the general regulation, and in the process the exceptions have swallowed the very rationale of the rule. It would seem that the SBA is in fact currently acting as a censor insofar as the SBA is forced to make content-based decisions such as differentiating between "general" bookstores that are exempted from the opinion molder rule and "specialty" bookstores which are not. In addition, in a fit of parapatatic ruling, some small businesses such as theater owners have found themselves abruptly declared ineligible for SBA loans, then eligible, and then ineligible again in a span of only a few years.

In 1980 the SBA, admitting that there was a problem with the rule, suggested a "Proposed Rulemaking," but failed to act on it. A 1982 Wall Street Journal editorial quoted SBA staff as stating that the rule was plain "silly."

In 1984 I cosponsored a bill to amend the opinion molder regulation. Unfortunately, the bill fell prey to a constitutional quagmire that has defeated congressional attempts to alter the regulation throughout the years.

On the one hand, proponents of the opinion molder regulation argue that the bill is not unconstitutionally overbroad in preventing wholly legitimate small businesses from receiving SBA financial assistance. They would claim that while the Government cannot put up obstacles to constitutionally protected speech, the Government is under no obligation to affirmatively support (through Government loans or otherwise) constitutionally protected speech. cf. Harris v. McRae 448 U.S. 297 (1980), Regan v. Taxation With Representation, 461 U.S. 540 (1983). Thus the argument is made that Government largess is simply not subject to first amendment scrutiny.

On the other hand, when opponents of the opinion molder regulation attempt to more narrowly tailor the regulation so as to allow a greater number of legitimate small businesses to be exempted from this rule, proponents suddenly become very concerned about the constitutional implications from any conceivable threat of content-based discrimination.

Significantly, it should be noted, that the opinion molder regulation was declared unconstitutional by a Federal District Court of Colorado on December 3, 1985. Mission Trace Investments v. Small Business Administration, USDC Colo, 83-C-1982, 11/12/85. In this case the court ruled that the SBA's reliance on Regan versus Taxation with Representation was misplaced. The SBA under the advise of the Justice Department has chosen to appeal the case.

Not surprisingly, the SBA has chosen to read the case in the narrowest possible fashion, and is quick to point out that a district court's ruling is not precedent setting. Nonetheless, it is significant that the very constitutionality of the opinion molder rule has been put into question for the first time by a Federal court. More important, is the fact that the regulation violates the spirit, if not the letter of the first amendment, and as such represents unacceptable public policy.

It does not make sense to preclude a whole range of legitimate small businesses from the benefits of the SBA, simply because it is administratively convenient to do so. The goals of small business and free speech are not now and never have been inimical. On the contrary, expressions such as the "free marketplace of ideas" reflect just how deeply imbedded the complementary nature of business and free speech are to the American value system.

Arguably, the SBA should be giving special consideration to promoting opinion molding small businesses, the very businesses the SBA instead precluded from financial assistance. The public interest in encouraging a multitude of competitive voices in opinion molding businesses such as newspapers would seem to be self-evident. The recent rash of mega-mergers and acquisitions in the communications field heightens the need to countervail this unhealthy business concentration with greater competition from small businesses.

Mr. President, while there is a legitimate argument to be made that the opinion molding small businesses should be given special consideration by the SBA, surely at the absolute minimum, they deserve treatment equal to that of any other legitimate small business.

It is my observation that civil liberties such as the first amendment protected right of free speech are threatened most often by acts of omission rather than commission. It is always administratively convenient to adopt the easy solution, giving short shrift to time consuming and complicated constitutional issues. To counter this tendency, I am pleased to introduce the following resolution today to encourage the SBA to amend or eliminate the opinion molder regulation. In doing so the interests of free speech and small business will be furthered.●

(a) It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly or intentionally to possess a controlled substance unless such substance was obtained directly, or pursuant to a valid prescription or order, from a practitioner, while acting in the course of his professional practice, or except as otherwise authorized by this title or title III. Any person who violates this subsection may be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of not more than 1 year, and shall be fined a minimum of $1,000 but not more than $5,000, or both, except that if he commits such offense after a prior conviction under this title or title III, or a prior conviction for any drug or narcotic offense chargeable under the law of any State, has become final, he shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment for not less than 15 days but not more than 2 years, and shall be fined a minimum of $2,500 but not more than $10,000, except, further, that if he commits such offense after two or more prior convictions under this title or title III, or two or more prior convictions for any drug or narcotic offense chargeable under the law of any State, or a combination of two or more such offenses have become final, he shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment for not less than 90 days but not more than 3 years, and shall be fined a minimum of $5,000 but not more than $25,000. The imposition or execution of a minimum sentence required to be imposed under this subsection shall not be suspended or deferred. Further, upon conviction, a person who violates this subsection shall be fined the reasonable costs of the investigation and prosecution of the offense, including the costs of prosecution of an offense as defined in sections 1918 and 1920 of title 28, United States Code, except that this sentence shall not apply and a fine under this section need not be imposed if the court determines under the provision of title 18 that the defendant lacks the ability to pay.

"(b)(1) If any person who has not previously been convicted of violating subsection (a) of this section, any other provision of this subchapter or subchapter II of this chapter, or any other law of the United States relating to narcotic drugs, marihuana, or depressant or stimulant substances, is found guilty of a violation of subsection (a) of this section after trial or upon a plea of guilty, the court may, without entering a judgment of guilty and with the consent of such person, defer further proceedings and place him on probation upon such reasonable conditions as it may require and for such period, not to exceed one year, as the court may prescribe. Upon violation of a condition of the probation, the court may enter an adjudication of guilt and proceed as otherwise provided. The court may, in its discretion, dismiss the proceedings against such person and discharge him from probation before the expiration of the maximum period prescribed for such person's probation. Discharge and dismissal under this subsection shall be without court adjudication of guilt, but a nonpublic record thereof shall be retained by the Department of Justice solely for the purpose of use by the courts in determining whether or not, in subsequent proceedings, such person qualifies under this subsection. Such discharge or dismissal shall not be deemed a conviction for purposes of disqualifications or disabilities imposed by law upon conviction of a crime (including the penalties prescribed under this part for second or subsequent convictions) or for any other purpose. Discharge and dismissal under this section may occur only once with respect to any person.

"(2) Upon the dismissal of such person and discharge of the proceedings against him under paragraph (1) of this subsection, such person, if he was not over twenty-one years of age at the time of the offense, may apply to the court for an order to expunge from all official records (other than the nonpublic records to be retained by the Department of Justice under paragraph (1)) all recordation relating to his arrest, indictment or information, trial, finding of guilty, and dismissal and discharge pursuant to this section. If the court determines, after hearing, that such person was dismissed and the proceedings against him discharged and that he was not over twenty-one years of age at the time of the offense, it shall enter such order. The effect of such order shall be to restore such person, in the contemplation of the law, to the status he occupied before such arrest or indictment or information. No person as to whom such order has been entered shall be held thereafter under any provision of any law to be guilty of perjury or otherwise giving a false statement by reason of his failures to recite or acknowledge such arrest, or indictment or information, or trial in response to any inquiry made of him for any purpose.

"(c) As used in this section, the term 'drug or narcotic offense' means any offense which proscribes the possession, distribution, manufacture, cultivation, sale, transfer, or the attempt or conspiracy to possess, distribute, manufacture, cultivate, sell or transfer any substance the possession of which is prohibited under this title.".

"(h) In addition to the venue provided for in section 1395 of title 28 or any other provision of law, in the case of property of a defendant charged with a violation that is the basis for forfeiture of the property under this section, a proceeding for forfeiture under this section may be brought in the judicial district in which the defendant owning such property is found or in the judicial district in which the criminal prosecution is brought.

"(i) In the case of property subject to forfeiture under subsection (a)(1)(B), the following additional provisions shall, to the extent provided by treaty, apply:

"(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, except section 3 of the Anti Drug Abuse Act of 1986, whenever property is civilly or criminally forfeited under the Controlled Substances Act, the Attorney General may, with the concurrence of the Secretary of State, equitably transfer any conveyance, currency, and any other type of personal property which the Attorney General may designate by regulation for equitable transfer, or any amounts realized by the United States from the sale of any real or personal property forfeited under the Controlled Substances Act to an appropriate foreign country to reflect generally the contribution of any such foreign country participating directly or indirectly in any acts which led to the seizure or forfeiture of such property. The foreign country shall, in the event of a transfer of property or proceeds of sale of property under this subchapter, bear all expenses incurred by the United States in the seizure, maintenance, inventory, storage, forfeiture, and disposition of the property, and all transfer costs. The payment of all such expenses, and the transfer of assets pursuant to this paragraph, shall be upon such terms and conditions as the Attorney General may, in his discretion, set. "(2) The provisions of this section shall not be construed as limiting or superseding any other authority of the United States to provide assistance to a foreign country in obtaining property related to a crime committed in the foreign country, including property which is sought as evidence of a crime committed in the foreign country.

"(3) A certified order or judgment of forfeiture by a court of competent jurisdiction of a foreign country concerning property which is the subject of forfeiture under this section and was determined by such court to be the type of property described in subsection (a)(1)(B) of this section, and any certified recordings or transcripts of testimony taken in a foreign judicial proceeding concerning such order or judgment of forfeiture, shall be admissible in evidence in a proceeding brought pursuant to this section. Such certified order or judgment of forfeiture, when admitted into evidence, shall constitute probable cause that the property forfeited by such order or judgment of forfeiture is subject to forfeiture under this section and creates a rebuttable presumption of the forfeitability of such property under this section.

"(4) A certified order or judgment of conviction by a court of competent jurisdiction of a foreign country concerning an unlawful drug activity which gives rise to forfeiture under this section and any certified recordings or transcripts of testimony taken in a foreign judicial proceeding concerning such order or judgment of conviction shall be admissible in evidence in a proceeding brought pursuant to this section. Such certified order or judgment of conviction, when admitted into evidence, creates a rebuttable presumption that the unlawful drug activity giving rise to forfeiture under this section has occurred.

"(5) The provisions of paragraphs (3) and (4) of this subsection shall not be construed as limiting the admissibility of any evidence otherwise admissible, nor shall they limit the ability of the United States to establish probable cause that property is subject to forfeiture by any evidence otherwise admissible.

"(B) from taking direct action to protect life or safety if exigent circumstances arise in the course of an arrest which are unanticipated and which pose an immediate threat to United States or foreign officers or to members of the public."; and

SEC. 2011. INFORMATION-SHARING SO THAT VISAS ARE DENIED TO DRUG TRAFFICKERS.

(a) NEED FOR COMPREHENSIVE INFORMATION SYSTEM.—The Congress is concerned that the executive branch has not established a comprehensive information system on all drug arrests of foreign nationals in the United States so that information may be communicated to the appropriate United States embassies, even though the establishment of such a system is required by section 132 of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1986 and 1987.

(b) ESTABLISHMENT OF SYSTEM.—The executive branch shall act expeditiously to establish the comprehensive information system required by section 132 of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1986 and 1987, and submit to the Congress a report that the system has been established.

SEC. 2012. CONDITIONS ON ASSISTANCE FOR BOLIVIA.

(a) OPERATION BLAST FURNACE.—(1) It is the sense of the Congress that—

(A) the Government of Bolivia's recent drug interdiction operations in cooperation with the United States (Operation Blast Furnace) evidenced a determination to combat the growing power of the narcotics trade and narcotics traffickers;

(B) the operation has had a dramatic effect on the coca trade in that country by dropping the price of coca below the cost of production;

(C) as a result of this operation the coca trade has in the short term been sharply constricted;

(D) the restoration of non-coca dependent economic growth in Bolivia is crucial to the achievement of long-term progress in controlling illicit narcotics production; and

(E) control of illicit drug production is crucial to the survival of democratic institutions and democratic government in Bolivia.

(2) The Congress, therefore, applauds the demonstrated willingness of the Paz Estenssoro government, despite the risks of severe domestic criticism and disruptive economic consequences, to cooperate with the United States in Operation Blast Furnace.

(b) CONDITIONS ON ASSISTANCE.—Paragraph (2) of section 611 of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1985 is amended by striking out subparagraphs (A) and (B) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(A) up to 50 percent of the aggregate amount of such assistance allocated for Bolivia may be provided at any time after the President certifies to the Congress that Bolivia has engaged in narcotics interdiction operations which have significantly disrupted the illicit coca industry in Bolivia or has cooperated with the United States in such operations; and

"(B) the remaining amount of such assistance may be provided at any time after the President certifies to the Congress that Bolivia has either met in calendar year 1986 the eradication targets for the calendar year 1985 contained in its 1983 narcotics agreements with the United States or has entered into an agreement of cooperation with the United States for implementing that plan for 1987 and beyond (including numerical eradication targets) and is making substantial progress toward the plan's objectives, including substantial eradication of illicit coca crops and effective use of United States assistance.

"In the certification required by suparagraph (B), the President shall explain why the terms of the 1983 agreement proved unattainable and the reasons why a new agreement was necessary.".

(c) RELATION TO OTHER PROVISIONS.—Nothing in the amendment made by subsection (b) shall be construed as superseding any provision of section 481 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961.

(B) in which any senior official of the government of such country engages in, encourages, or facilitates the production or distribution of illegal drugs;

(C) in which any member of an agency of the United States Government engaged in drug enforcement activities since January 1, 1985, has suffered or been threatened with violence, inflicted by or with the complicity of any law enforcement or other officer of such country or any political subdivision thereof; or

(D) which, having been requested to do so by the United States Government, fails to provide reasonable cooperation to lawful activities of United States drug enforcement agents, including the refusal of permission to such agents engaged in interdiction of aerial smuggling into the United States to pursue suspected aerial smugglers a reasonable distance into the airspace of the requested country; and

(2) describing for each country listed under paragraph (1) the activities and identities of officials whose activities caused such country to be so listed.

(b) RESTRICTIONS.—No United States assistance may be furnished to any country listed under subsection (a)(1), and the United States representative to any multilateral development bank shall vote to oppose any loan or other use of the funds of such bank for the benefit of any country listed under subsection (a)(1), unless the President certifies to the Congress that—

(1) overriding vital national interests require that provision of such assistance;

(2) such assistance would improve the prospects for cooperation with such country in halting the flow of illegal drugs; and

(3) the government of such country had made bona fide efforts to investigate and prosecute appropriate charges for any crime described in subsection (a)(1)(C) which may have been committed in such country.

(c) RELATION TO OTHER PROVISIONS.—The restrictions contained in subsection (b) are in addition to the restrictions contained in section 481(h) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 or any other provision of law.

(d) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section, the terms "major illicit drug producing country", "major drug-transit country", and "United States assistance" have the same meaning as is given to those terms by section 481(i) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961.

(b) IMPROVED CAPABILITY FOR RESPONDING TO NARCOTERRORISM.—The President shall take concrete steps to improve the capability of the executive branch—

(1) to collect information concerning the links between narcotics traffickers and the act of terrorism abroad, and

SSC. 2015. INTERDICTION PROCEDURES FOR VESSELS OF FOREIGN REGISTRY.

(a) FINDING.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the interdiction by the United States Coast Guard of vessels suspected for carrying illicit narcotics can be a difficult procedure when the vessel is of foreign registry and is located beyond the customs waters of the United States;

(2) before boarding and inspecting such a vessel, the Coast Guard must obtain consent from either the master of the vessel or the country of registry; and

(3) this process, and obtaining the consent of the country of registry to further law enforcement action, may delay the interdiction of the vessel by 3 or 4 days.

(b) NEGOTIATIONS CONCERNING INTERDICTION PROCEDURES.—

(1) The Congress urges the Secretary of State, in consultation with the Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating, to increase effects to negotiate with relevant countries procedure which will facilitate interdiction of vessels suspected of carrying illicit narcotics.

SEC. 2016. INTELLIGENCE SUPPORT TO COMBATING THE DRUG PROBLEM.

(a) It is the sense of the Congress that the Intelligence Community can play a key role in United States efforts to prevent the importation of illegal drugs into the United States. It is also the sense of the Congress that the drug problem is sufficiently important that monitoring the production of illegal drugs and providing support to efforts to halt the trafficking in illegal drugs should be a high priority for the United States intelligence program.

(b) In order to improve the strategic international narcotics control program of the United States and to assist the reporting requirements of section 481(e) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, the Congress directs the Director of Central Intelligence to improve the collection and analysis of foreign drug production sufficiently to produce highly reliable data on drug cultivation, harvest, and yields for each major illicit drug producing country (as defined by section 481(i) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961).

(c) The Congress also directs the Director of Central Intelligence (hereafter in this paragraph referred to as the "DCI") to make support to anti-drug efforts a Level One Priority in his National Foreign Intelligence Strategy and to reflect this priority in the National Foreign Intelligence Program. The Congress understands that—

(1) a copy of the DCI's National Foreign Intelligence Strategy will be provided to the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives and the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate, with the DCI's budget request for fiscal year 1988; and

(b) INCREASES IN MULTILATERAL DEVELOPMENT BANK LENDING FOR CROP SUBSTITUTION PROJECTS.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall instruct the United States Executive Directors of the multilateral development banks to initiate discussions with other Directors of their respective banks and to propose that each such bank increase the amount of lending by such bank for crop substitution programs which will provide an economic alternative for the cultivation of production of illicit narcotic drugs or other controlled substances in major illicit drug producing countries, to the extent such countries develop and maintain adequate drug eradication programs.

The Congress hereby declares that drugs are a national security problem and urges the President to explore the possibility of engaging such essentially security-oriented organizations as the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in cooperative drug programs.

SEC. 2021. FINDINGS CONCERNING GREATER INTERNATIONAL EFFORT TO ADDRESS DRUG THREAT.

The Congress finds that—

(1) in response to the growing narcotics threat to the international community—

(A) the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, the 1972 Protocol amending that Convention, and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances were adopted under United Nations asupices, and

(B) the United Nations has created various entities to deal with drug abuse control and prevention; and

SEC. 2032. NARCOTICS CONTROL EFFORTS IN MEXICO.

(a) CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS.—The Congress finds—

(1) in their meeting in August 1986, President de la Madrid Hurtado and President Reagan recognized the unique relationship between our two countries and the importance and the desire to respect the sovereignty of each nation;

(2) further, the United States government has actively worked to support the Mexican government in easing its international debt burden;

(3) Both presidents pledged their cooperation in drug eradication, enforcement and education;

(4) This pledge of cooperation has not been realized fully because of the inadequate response of the Mexican government in:

(A) fully investigating the 1985 murders of U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration agent Enrique Camarena Salazar and his pilot, Alfedo Zavala Avelar;

(B) fully investigating the 1986 detention and torture of U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration agent Victor Cortez, Junior;

(D) using effectively and efficiently the fleet of aircraft provided by the United States government for drug eradication and interdiction; and

(E) preventing drug trafficking and drug-related violence on the U.S.-Mexican border.

(b) Therefore, it is the sense of Congress that unless substantial progress is demonstrated in the near future on the issues described in subparagraph (A)(4), the President should consider taking one or more of the following measures:

(1) imposition of a mandatory travel advisory for all of Mexico;

(2) restrictions on foreign assistance (including further disbursements from the Exchange Stabilization Fund and Federal Reserve Bank);

(3) denial of favorable tariff treatment for Mexican products;

(4) denial of favorable U.S. votes in multilateral development banks.

(4) the Department of Defense and the use of its resources should be an integral part of a comprehensive, natonal drug interdiction program;

(5) the Federal Government civilian agencies engaged in drug interdiction, particularly the United States Customs Service and the Coast Guard, currently lack the aircraft, ships, radar, command, control, communications, and intelligence (C3I) system, and manpower resources necessary to mount a comprehensive attack on the narcotics traffickers who threaten the United States;

(1) to increase the level of funding and resources available to civilian drug interdiction agencies of the Federal Government;

Subtitle C—Indians and Alaska Natives

SEC. 4201. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Indian Alcohol and Substance Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act of 1986".

PART I—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 4202. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) the Federal Government has a historical relationship and unique legal and moral responsibility to Indian tribes and their members,

(2) included in this responsibility is the treaty, statutory, and historical obligation to assist the Indian tribes in meeting the health and social needs of their members,

(3) alcoholism and alcohol and substance abuse is the most severe health and social problem facing Indian tribes and people today and nothing is more costly to Indian people than the consequences of alcohol and substance abuse measured in physical, mental, social, and economic terms,

(4) alcohol and substance abuse is the leading generic risk factor among Indians, and Indians die from alcoholism at over 4 times the age-adjusted rates for the United States population and alcohol and substance misuse results in a rate of years of potential life lost nearly 5 times that of the United States,

(5) 4 of the top 10 causes of death among Indians are alcohol and drug related injuries (18 percent of all deaths), chronic liver disease and cirrhosis (5 percent), suicide (3 percent), and homicide (3 percent),

(6) primarily because deaths from unintentional injuries and violence occur disproportionately among young people, the age-specific death rate for Indians is approximately double the United States rate for the 15 to 45 age group,

(7) Indians between the ages of 15 and 24 years of age are more than 2 times as likely to commit suicide as the general population and approximately 80 percent of those suicides are alcohol-related,

(8) Indians between the ages of 15 and 24 years of age are twice as likely as the general population to die in automobile accidents, 75 percent of which are alcohol-related,

(9) the Indian Health Service, which is charged with treatment and rehabilitation efforts, has directed only 1 percent of its budget for alcohol and substance abuse problems,

(10) the Bureau of Indian Affairs, which has responsibility for programs in education, social services, law enforcement, and other areas, has assumed little responsibility for coordinating its various efforts to focus on the epidemic of alcohol and substance abuse among Indian people,

(11) this lack of emphasis and priority continues despite the fact that Bureau of Indian Affairs and Indian Health Service officials publicly acknowledge that alcohol and substance abuse among Indians is the most serious health and social problem facing the Indian people, and

(12) the Indian tribes have the primary responsibility for protecting and ensuring the well-being of their members and the resources made available under this subtitle will assist Indian tribes in meeting that responsibility.

SEC. 4203. PURPOSE.

It is the purpose of this subtitle to—

(1) authorize and develop a comprehensive, coordinated attack upon the illegal narcotics traffic in Indian country and the deleterious impact of alcohol and substance abuse upon Indian tribes and their members,

(2) provide needed direction and guidance to those Federal agencies responsible for Indian programs to identify and focus existing programs and resources, including those made available by this subtitle, upon this problem,

(3) provide authority and opportunities for Indian tribes to develop and implement a coordinated program for the prevention and treatment of alcohol and substance abuse at the local level, and

(4) to modify or supplement existing programs and authorities in the areas of education, family and social services, law enforcement and judicial services, and health services to further the purposes of this subtitle.

SEC. 4204. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this subtitle—

(1) The term "agency" means the local administrative entity of the Bureau of Indian Affairs serving one or more Indian tribes within a defined geographic area.

(2) The term "youth" shall have the meaning given it in any particular Tribal Action Plan adopted pursuant to section 4205, except that, for purposes of statistical reporting under this subtitle, it shall mean a person who is 19 years or younger or who is in attendance at a secondary school.

(3) The term "Indian tribe" means any Indian tribe, band, nation, or other organized group or community of Indians (including any Alaska Native village or regional or village corporation as defined in, or established pursuant to, the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1601 et seq.)) which is recognized as eligible for special programs and services provided by the United States to Indians because of their status as Indians.

(4) The term "prevention and treatment" includes, as appropriate—
